A $13,000,000,000 Tax Bill

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

A recently published forecast of the 1933 tax bill now piling up for the American people to pay, sets the total at more than $13,000,000,000.

That estimate, the forecast continues, is 35 per cent higher than in 1932, 30 per cent higher than in 1930, and 60 per cent higher than in 1921.

It will be collected through many agencies, Federal, State and local, but always from the same source—the public.

It represents 20 per cent of our anticipated national income. In other words, it will take one dollar out of every five earned collectively by the American people.

That is the heavy load on American enterprise and American earnings that extravagance in government—whether Federal, State or local—inevitably entails.

Announced with the opening of the New Year, the estimate introduces a discouraging note. It comes at a time when America has expressed its determination to spare no effort which would check recession and forward the progress of a healthy recovery.

But recovery cannot be attained by loading both labor and enterprise with heavy and disproportionate costs of government.

It can be aided by lightening that burden and by encouraging both labor and enterprise to progress. Promise of relief from unreasonable taxation would be one of the most constructive steps that any Congress or any State Legislature could take.

Many public men realize this truism, as recent developments at Washington and throughout the country have indicated. To them, the public should give encouragement.

And to legislators who fail to realize it—whether at Washington or in State Capitals—is due a reminder that every dollar of wasted public money is a dollar out of some constituent's earnings.

Money raised by taxes is the people's money—and to demand that it be handled without waste is the people's right.

ORDINANCE

An ordinance designating certain parts of streets as through highways, establishing rules and regulations, and prescribing penalties for violation.

Be it Ordained by the Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa

Section One. Definitions. All extensions of primary roads within the municipality are designated as through highways (373 Chapter 134, Acts 47 GA.)

Section Two. Through highways designated. The following parts of streets, in addition to the extensions of primary roads, are hereby designated as through highways. (267, Chapter 134, Acts 47 GA.)

Main street from the west corporate limits to and including its intersection with 3rd street.

School Zone: Intersection of Elder street with 3rd street, and the intersection of Jerusalem street with 3rd and 4th streets.

Section Three. Signs placed. The mayor shall cause to be placed conspicuously at each point where a street intersects such designated through highway a sign, bearing the word "STOP" in letters not less than six inches in height (370, 268, Chapter 134, Acts 47 GA.)

Section Four. Entering Through Highway. The driver of a vehicle shall stop at the entrance to a through highway where stop signs have been erected and shall yield the right-of-way to other vehicles which have entered the intersection from said through highway or which may be approaching so closely on said through highway as to create a hazard, but said driver having so yielded may proceed cautiously and with due care enter said through highway (350, Chapter 134 Acts 47 GA.)

Section Five. Offense. It shall be unlawful to refuse, neglect or fail to comply with the traffic signs placed upon the side roads, streets or alleys intersecting the through highways.

Section Six. Penalties. Anyone violating any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction, be subject to imprisonment not exceeding thirty days or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. Whenever the fine and costs imposed for the violation of this ordinance are not paid the person convicted may be committed to jail until such fine and costs are paid, not exceeding thirty days (500 Chapter 134, Acts 47 GA.) (5714)

Section Seven. All ordinances or parts of ordinances in conflict with the provisions of this ordinance are hereby repealed.

Section Eight. This ordinance shall be in force and effect from and after its passage and publication as provided by law.

Passed and adopted this 13th day of December 1932.

HANCOCK SECURITY BOARD MEMBERS REAPPOINTED

GARNER—The Hancock county board of supervisors Friday reappointed members of the social security board for this county which include Oscar Johnson, Kanawha; Edith Elling, Garner, secretary; and Penn Eckels, Britt. E. M. Paulson, Wesley, investigator, and Mrs. J. E. Tierney, assistant, were appointed quite recently. They also appointed Don Butz of Garner, constable for Garfield township.

RUTH ABEL AND BERNARD PRINGNITZ WED WEDNESDAY

Wednesday, December 29th, at high noon the marriage of Miss Ruth Mabel Abele, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Low Abele, and Bernard Pringnitz, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Otto Pringnitz, took place at the home of the bride's parents in Liberty township.

Rev. Wm. Zabalka, pastor of the Methodist church, performed the wedding ceremony, using the single ring service.

The bride was attired in a becoming gown of blue crepe with silver accessories and carried a bouquet of pink roses. She was attended by Ethel Pringnitz, a sister of the groom, who wore a tangerine ensemble with brown accessories and wore a shoulder corsage of white sweet peas and roses. The groom was attended by Harold Abele, brother of the bride. The groom and best man both wore dark suits with pink boutonnieres.

Mrs. Dusenberg of Garner, an aunt of the bride, played Mendelssohn's Wedding March and also furnished accompaniment for Madeline Abele, a sister of the bride, who sang "I Love You Truly" and "O Promise Me." A violin solo was played by Miss Hilda Abele.

Immediately after the ceremony a bountiful dinner was served. Places were laid for forty guests at tables which carried out pink and white appointments. A pretty three-tiered wedding cake, baked by Mrs. Art Abele served as centerpiece for the bride's table. The dinner was served by Lois and Merlin Pringnitz, Ruth Dusenberg and Lois Reimer, who all wore pink uniforms alike.

Miss Abele was graduated from Garner High School with the class of 1931 and since that time has been a successful teacher in the rural schools of Liberty township.

Mr. Pringnitz was graduated from Klemme High School with the class of 1931 and has been assisting his father on the farm.

The couple left on a honeymoon trip through Minnesota. After March 1st they will be at home to their many friends at the farm now occupied by Walter Blumer.

BUSINESS MEN'S BANQUET WAS ATTENDED BY SIXTY

Similar Meetings Will Be Held Once Every Three Months

There were approximately sixty business men in attendance at the Business Men's Christmas party and banquet held at the high gymnasium last Thursday evening.

The ladies of the Legion Auxiliary prepared and served the meal. The tables were nicely decorated in Christmas fashion.

Entertainment consisted of community singing led by Supt. Galbreth and accordion music was provided between courses by Ray Jorgenson Jr. Miss Marian Waterman gave a couple of clever song and dance numbers and was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. George Lawhorn.

The main address of the evening was given by Mr. Cornwall, of Mason City, who is vice president of the Chamber of Commerce there. Several other Gentlemen from Mason City accompanied him to Klemme and were guests.

After the banquet and entertainment a short business meeting was held at which time officers were elected for the coming year. W. C. Keraus was named as president to head the group, R. A. Jorgenson, Vice President and Dr. E. G. Schaeffer, secretary.

The president will name a number of men to act as an advisory board whose duty it will also be to direct various activities throughout the year.

Nearly fifty men signed up as members of the Civic Club for the coming year, while others who were unable to be present, have signified their intentions of joining. The main purpose of the club will be to make Klemme a better town in which to live, to promote friendliness and co-operation.

Entertained At Bridge Luncheon

Mrs. E. F. Jacobs was hostess to a bridge luncheon at her home Friday. Bridge was played at three tables. Out of town guests were Mrs. Hod Lawhorn, Mrs. Steil, Mrs. Roy Strate, Mrs. Ed. Bock, Mrs. Millard and Mrs. Missal, all of Garner. High scores were won by Mrs. P. M. Wilson and Mrs. E. C. Buntbach. Door prize was won by Mrs. Missal.

RACCOON TURNS TOURIST

On March 9, 1937, a small raccoon was tagged with a small metal tag on the edge of its ear. The tag carried the number 857 and the name of the State Conservation Commission. After being tagged by a Conservation Officer it was released in Section 32, Waterman Township, O'Brien County.

On November 23, 1937, the tagged animal was trapped in Section 21, Freedom Township, Palo Alto County, approximately 1 1/2 miles east of the dam on Medium Lake. The tag was promptly returned to the Conservation Commission at Des Moines where the record of the tag indicated the animal had traveled at least 50 miles. Oddly enough, the raccoon chose "Freedom" Township for its new home and lost its freedom in a trapper's "set."

YEAST FEED FOR PIGS IS NOT GOOD BUY EXPERIMENT SHOWS

The man who buys yeast feeds to improve the gains on his pigs from a ration of oats and pasture is throwing his money away, according to the results of an experiment conducted the past summer at Iowa State College.

So many questions have been coming to the college in recent years regarding the claims of yeast feed salesmen about the value of their product for pigs that an experiment was carried out to make more accurate the answer to the inquiries from farmers.

Three lots of 100-pound pigs were used. The first lot got ground soaked oats and minerals on pasture. The second lot got ground soaked oats, tankage, minerals and pasture, and the third lot was fed ground soaked oats and the yeast feed according to the directions of the yeast feed manufacturer. The yeast feed was also put in self-feeders so that the pigs could eat more of it if they did not get enough to satisfy them in their ration. The yeast-fed lot, like the others, was on pasture.

The pigs in the three lots were fed for 60 days. Those fed only ground soaked oats, minerals and pasture gained exactly the same as those getting the yeast feed, ground soaked oats and pasture. The lot getting tankage outgained the other two lots slightly.

It was found that the lot fed yeast required more feed—more oats and more total feed—for each 100 pounds of gain than the pigs in the other two lots.

Horses Versus Cows
In an article in Spur, it is said that when a horse is sick it lies down whereas a sick cow will stand, contrary to her usual habits. When a horse is frightened he runs against the wind, the cow with the wind. It is also stated that when the two animals are drinking at the same trough, if the horse drinks first, there will not be enough water for the cow. If the cow drinks first, there will be plenty for both. As a result of walking beside camels during the expeditions, Arab horses are said to be the fastest walking horses in the world. Horses of the desert suffer as much as the men. During certain seasons, mares are given three to eight pints of camel's milk per day to supplant their meager feed of herbs, roots and flowers. The Arab rides his horse without bit, whip, spurs or blinkers. Generally the Bedouin rides without a saddle and with just a headstall and single rope.

The First Congress
The first congress under the constitution opened in New York city on Wednesday, March 4, 1789. The day was ushered in by the firing of cannon and the ringing of bells, and the ceremony was repeated at noon and at sunset, but in Federal hall only eight senators and thirteen representatives made their appearance—not enough to form a quorum of either house. A whole week passed and, no more senators arriving, those present sent out a circular letter to their colleagues urging them to hasten their coming. A second circular letter followed, a week later, but nearly a month had elapsed before either house could muster a quorum. The house was able to organize on March 30, but the senate not until April 6.

Molecules
A molecule is the ultimate limit of which matter can be subdivided. If we break a grain of sand into two smaller grains, and if we break these in two, the fragments are still sand. Repeating the division we eventually could reach a stage where the particles no longer could be divided and still remain sand. The smallest lumps of matter are known as molecules. At the time when the existence of molecules was deduced from certain theoretical considerations, early in the Nineteenth century, it was assumed that they must be inconceivably small. It is true, however, if the scientists of a century ago had any idea of the actual smallness of these bodies.

Pancake Marathon
The favorite dainties of Holland are waffles and wafeln, which are traditional dishes at the kerfuffle or fairs, of the nation. Puffed little blobs of pancake batter are spread with sugar and served in hundreds at a time. According to an old custom, waffles are served twenty-four of them with two wafeln, which are also covered with sugar.

Super-Families of Seals
May Be in Two Families
Seals may be divided into two super-families, including the hair or true seals and the fur seals, walrus and sea lions. These super-families differ from each other in important respects—in structure, appearance, habits, disposition, and method of locomotion, states a writer in the Indianapolis News. The fancied resemblance of the fur seals or seal bears to the seal of the Atlantic has led to much misconception which has been perpetuated in many books.
The animal that produces the seal-skin of commerce is properly the sea bear, which differs in important respects from the true seals. The sea bear is found in both the northern and southern hemisphere. The northern sea bear is a native of the northern Pacific and Arctic oceans, and is found chiefly in the islands in Bering sea and contiguous waters. Three principal herds of these animals are the American or Alaskan, the Russian and the Robben island herd. These herds constitute three distinct breeding grounds, feeding grounds, and routes of migration, and the individuals of each differ in form, color, and in character of fur. Only the young males called "bachelors" are killed for their skins, many of which are used for fur coats.

Agate as Most Precious Stone of Old Persians
Of all the folklores surrounding various gems, jewels and semi-precious stones, that connected with agate is one of the most interesting, says the Chicago Field Museum News.
In ancient Persia the Magi believed that agates could stop a storm or hurricane. For this purpose the stones were thrown into a boiling cauldron, and if they turned the water cold they were regarded as possessing the necessary magical power.
According to the ideas of the Magi, the stones, to be really efficacious, had to be fastened with lion's hair; they rejected hyena's hair as being provocative of family discord. An agate containing only one color was believed by the Magi to render an athlete invincible.

Sad-Eyed Saint Bernard
Most Romantic Large Dog
Probably the most romantic portrayed dog of all the large canine family is the sad-eyed Saint Bernard. This dog gained its reputation down through the years as a rescuer of man in the dangerous mountain passes of the Swiss Alps.
However, the Saint Bernard did not originate amid the lofty peaks, where later it was destined to become a hero on countless occasions. In short, this dog did not first come to light in Switzerland, asserts a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.
Folks have become quite familiar with the Saint Bernard because it has frequently been pictured in a setting of snow and ice, with brandy cask suspending from a huge collar. The eyes of the dog express sorrow, probably because of the "haw" or third eyelid.
These dogs are one of the giants of dogdom. When full grown, the average Saint Bernard weighs from 170 to 210 pounds.
The Saint Bernard is a graceful mover, chiefly because of its broad feet, which encase closed up toes that are well padded.
In fact, these dogs have a "fifth toe" on their hind feet. This is not a freak of nature which frequently crops up in other breeds. The "fifth toe" is a developed dewclaw that really is actually another toe. The surefootedness has been developed chiefly among the Swiss types, that have been used for rescue work.
Many a husband's hope chest is still full of socks waiting to be darned.

MANY 'HOPPER EGGS IN SOIL, SURVEY REVEALS
Weather Next Spring And To Determine Seriousness Of Crop Damage
Lurking in the sod surrounding cultivated fields throughout are grasshopper eggs sufficient in number to cause a serious shortage next year, announces C. J. Drake, state entomologist.
An extensive survey conducted jointly by the United States Department of Agriculture, the State Department of Agriculture, and the entomologists of Iowa State College, shows that 'hopper eggs are found in the soil in practically all of the 99 counties of the state.

Although the eggs are abundant in western and southern counties, a sufficiently large number was found in all counties to cause concern, he said. Dr. Drake pointed out, however, that the egg infestation does not warrant a forecast of a serious amount of grasshopper damage that will occur next year. Conditions during the late winter and early summer will determine the seriousness of the situation.
"A dry, hot season such as prevailed in 1936 would produce an equally serious if not more serious outbreak of grasshoppers than occurred that year," he declared. "On the other hand, rains and continued wet weather such as prevailed in 1937 would be a large measure, reduce the risk of a serious outbreak. It is entirely possible that the grasshopper damage would be about the same as in this summer."

Dr. Drake emphasized the ability of farmers and agricultural leaders preparing to meet with break if it materializes. Fine weather conditions are favorable for the 'hoppers, a thorough oning campaign can greatly reduce and in many cases prevent crop damages, he said.
During the year just ended, 445 farmers used a total of 19 tons of poison bait, treating more than 753,000 acres of cropland. It is estimated that more than $1,000,000 worth of crops were saved by the bait.

Dr. Drake said that sufficient bait is on hand in the state to handle an aggressive poisoning campaign next spring if the 'hopper materializes. He further expressed the hope that the federal government would supply Iowa with additional bait, as it has done in the past.

Kanawha And Ventura Fall In Shamrock Tilts

TAKE CONFERENCE TILT FROM KANAWHA BULLDOGS

Win Over Ventura Tuesday Night In Ragged Game

In a game that saw the Shamrocks getting off to a slow start, but opening up in the second quarter to pile up a score of 43 to 14 by the end of the game, the Kanawha Bulldogs were defeated and remain in the cellar in the Seven Eagles conference. Although Kanawha made the first three points, the quarter ended 6 to 3 in favor of Klemme and from then on the Shamrocks never were in danger.

Jorgenson went on a scoring rampage and rang up 25 points to lead his mates in the scoring, while Grosshuesch and Trampel each got two field goals, and the latter, three free throws. Schuldt got a field goal and a free throw and Lau and Kluckhohn each scored a field goal.

Trainer led the Kanawha offensive with 7 points.

The Little Shamrocks again outscored the Bulldogs and came out on the top end of a 19 to 7 score. Barz led the scoring with 6 points.

Down Ventura

Tuesday night on the Ventura floor, the Shamrocks rolled over Ventura 49 to 24. Starting with the opening whistle, the Shamrocks began banging in baskets, although the play was rather ragged the Shamrocks kept piling up the scores until the final gun, and were never threatened throughout the game.

The scoring was evenly divided with Jorgenson and Schuldt getting 15 and 14 points respectively. Grosshuesch got 11 and Trampel 9.

Grell stood out for the evening by garnering fifteen out of his team's 24 points.

The Little Shamrocks had a tough time handling their opponents but finally came through with a 19 to 18 win. Stille for Klemme and Dorow for Ventura each got 6 points to lead their respective teams.

STATE TO HAVE BIRD HATCHERY

The Conservation Commission has found it difficult to secure birds for stocking purposes. In order to insure good, healthy, disease-free birds reared by open range method to insure their being able to survive in the wild, the Commission believes a state game bird hatchery is necessary. A place is also needed where pheasants which are trapped in January and February from state areas that have been developed for maximum production can be held if these heavy populations are left, crop damage occurs to the farms near the areas. The Commission believes these surplus birds should be trapped, sent to the game hatchery and held until the critical period of winter is over, and then released in territory where additional seed is needed.

Above are the reasons why the Commission believes a properly operated game hatchery is necessary. There is, however, a more important reason. The Commission believes it must set up programs that will actively interest sportsmen and farmers in their own game problems. Without active personal interest and full cooperation of sportsmen, farmers and the department, the annual production of shootable crops of game on privately owned land will always be accidental and undependable, and will not maintain upland game hunting.

Ninety-six acres of land have been purchased for the game bird hatchery. This area is located at the south edge of the Ledges State Park. It was purchased from funds provided for emergency conservation work in cooperation with the CCC Camps. It is centrally located, has excellent drainage, can be extended if necessary, and is close to Iowa State College and the State Veterinary School where birds can be diagnosed for disease and scientific research can be carried on. The Commission has for several years, had a zoo at the Ledges State Park where confiscated and crippled birds and animals have been held until they have grown old enough or have recovered sufficiently to be released again to the wild. The hatchery will provide better facilities for handling these birds and animals. There is a power line available, there are surfaced roads, and the area is reasonable close to the central office.

This farm already had a residence suitable for the man in charge. The only new building needed will be a utility building which will contain the incubator room, egg room, brooder room, feed room, shop and garage. The work is being done by the CCC Camp located at Ames, and the money for materials is being provided from the emergency conservation fund administered by Governor N. G. Kraschel. Pheasant and quail laying and holding pens will also be constructed. Both pheasants and quail will be hatched in electric incubators and started in brooders, according to the latest successful methods.

The birds held for mass planting will be reared by the open range method to insure their being able to care for themselves when released.

After the birds are released, the farms should be set up as Game Management Areas and closed to hunting until the seed stock produces a shootable crop. Birds can never be produced on game farms, released to the wild and shot the same year. If birds cost 50 cents each and a hunter is allowed to take three birds the first day, he would be taking $1.50 worth of birds and paying only $1.00 for the

GLADYS MEINDERS IS WED ON DEC. 30 TO ALFRED JURGEMEYER

Popular Couple Honored At Wedding Dance In Garner Opera House

On Thursday evening, Dec 30 at 7 o'clock at the Reformed parsonage at Klemme, Miss Gladys Meinders, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Meinders, was united in marriage to Alfred Jurgemeyer, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm Jurgemeyer. The double ring ceremony was performed by the pastor, the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch.

They were attended by Miss Ruth Jurgemeyer, sister of the groom, and Wilbur Peterson of Ventura.

The bride was attired in a blue silk crepe dress and wore gray accessories. The groom wore a dark blue suit and the best man wore oxford gray.

The bride attended the Klemme high school and since then has been staying at the home of her parents.

The groom attended the Garner high school and since then has been assisting his father on their farm in Ell township.

After March 1 the young couple will start farming on the Mrs. Ida Lawhorn farm.

MOTHER JORGENSON

Funeral services for Mother Jorgenson were held at the Lutheran Church at Garner Friday afternoon, January 7, 1938, at 2:00 o'clock, with Rev. Wrede preaching the sermon, using as his text St. John 8 30-32.

Meta Maria Rasmussen Jorgenson was born at Trommahlolt, Denmark, on May 21, 1856 and passed from this earth on Wednesday evening, January 5, 1938 at 8:00 o'clock. She was 81 years old on her last birthday.

On Christmas day in 1878 she was united in marriage to Mr Jens Jorgenson and three children were born to this union: John C. Jorgenson of Rapid City, South Dakota; Christine, the only daughter, who died March 15, 1922, and Ray A Jorgenson of Klemme.

Mr. and Mrs. Jorgenson and their children, John and Christine, accompanied by the parents of Jens Jorgenson, came to America on August 25, 1888 and first located at Spencer, Iowa, where they resided a short time and then moved to Bayard, Iowa.

On April 6th, 1890 the family moved to Garner and that has since been the home of the deceased and her husband.

Mourning her death are her husband, Jens Jorgenson of Garner, and her two sons, John of Rapid City, South Dakota and R. A. Jorgenson of Klemme, Iowa; and one brother, Jens Rasmussen of Modesto, California; two grand sons, Ray Jorgenson, Jr. of Klemme, Iowa, and John P. Jorgenson of Winner, South Dakota.

Interment was made at Concord Cemetery, Garner, at the side of her daughter, Christine.

She was carried to her final resting place by R. E. Nesbit, Mike Jacobson, Hollie Bethke, C. V. McCullough, Wm. Quilling and L. N. Thompson.

TRUMAN GLASSELL AND EVA SULLIVAN MARRIED JAN. 1

A quiet wedding ceremony at Austin, Minn., the first day of the new year joined the lives of Truman Glassell of Garner and Eva Sullivan of Klemme.

The ceremony was performed at 12 o'clock noon Saturday, Jan. 1. The couple was unattended.

Mr. Glassell, a son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Glassell of California, has spent many years in Garner and is employed at the post office. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Stokesbary of Klemme and has made her home in Klemme most of her life.

The couple has started house-keeping in an apartment at the home of Mrs. J. E. Tierney—Garner Leader.

FARMERS SEEKING RETURN OF PROCESSING TAX COLLECTED FROM 1934 TO 1936

Farmers in this community who produced and sold hogs during the period from 1934 to 1936 in which the Government collected processing taxes, have started organizing a local unit of the National Farmers Process Tax Recovery Association. This national movement is waging a successful fight to get refunds of processing taxes paid by hog producers and it is estimated that Hancock County farmers would have 450,000 thousands of dollars due in refunds from the Federal Government.

Local officers of this N. F. P. A. are Louis Griffen, Garner; Fernon Griggs, Klemme; and Silvanus Walcker, Garner. National headquarters are maintained at the nation's capitol where the work of keeping the battle actively before Congress and federal officials is in charge of Mr. Edward E. Kennedy. The home office of the association is located at Des Moines, Iowa and it is incorporated under the law of that state.

Great progress has already been made in the fight to bring these rights of tax paying farmers before the Congress and the President. In fact a resolution now up for legislative action would give farmers the same right to recover the taxes, as was granted to the packers and it is well known that the meat packers recovered many millions of dollars as did millers and other handlers of farm products who simply acted as the collection agencies for the Government under the AAA. The farmers who actually paid the tax money and saw it taken from the proceeds of their sales have so far been left holding the bag.

Farmers in Hancock County are actually joining the association and placing claims with the Government for refunding of taxes already paid. Representatives of the association are also calling on many farmers in the community.

The entire movement is premised upon the following indisputable facts which are readily admitted by officials of the Government as establishing the right of hog producers to be refunded the amount of taxes paid:

1. The processing tax on hogs was held illegal because unconstitutional;
2. The burden of the tax was borne by the producer because the amount of the tax was deducted from the price of his hogs;
3. Congress has already established a precedent for refunding in its Revenue Act of 1936, by making it possible for processors and packers to recover such tax as they bore the burden of and paid;
4. More than 21 millions of dollars in claims for refunds have already been allowed packers and processors by the Commission of Internal Revenue;
5. The Processing Tax Recovery bill provides for refunds for farmers for unconstitutional tax borne by them;
6. The Processing Tax Recovery bill asks Congress only to do as much for farmers as it has done for the packers and processors—namely, refund the illegally collected taxes;
7. The hog producers paid the processing tax and they are fully and wholly within their rights in seeking to have it returned to them, inasmuch as it came from their pockets in the first place.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—The hysteria of war is in the air. It has been increasing in tempo and it may throw us out of our sense of equilibrium as a nation unless we watch our step. It is, indeed, a time for all people to keep their sense of direction and to avoid unnecessary and dangerous acts of an inflammatory character.

War Hysteria

The sinking of the American gunboat, Panay, by the Japanese in the Yangtse river of China apparently has set fire to tinder because there have been outbursts of all sorts since that inexcusable incident of early December. There can be excuse or apology by the Japanese on end, but neither excuse nor apology will satisfy most Americans. They feel properly that Japan is trying to rub our collective noses into the ground and nearly every person wants to do something about a thing of that kind. On the other hand, I am convinced that the answer lies in another direction; it is to be found, I believe, in exacting a promise from the Japanese that they will cut out those tactics. If their promises mean anything, it will be better to accept them and hope that we may not be confronted with another such incident.

In any event, there is plenty of evidence that the majority of the American people desire to avoid war. They will continue to cherish peace unless elements in our nation lead us in another direction by use of war propaganda. I include in those elements the government itself. I do so because the government, by use of propaganda, can come pretty close to leading the nation by the nose if it so desires. It can build up sentiment against the Japanese until there is a white heat and a demand for vengeance. I believe President Roosevelt is trying to avoid war at this juncture. There is a basis for this belief in the fact that the Department of State has withheld some of the facts about the Panay sinking. These facts, as rumored, are of a character that easily could fan flames of added hatred. On this basis, it appears at least that Mr. Roosevelt is seeking to avoid ill-considered conclusions by the nation.

But as was said by an earlier President: the time to prepare for war is while the nation is at peace. That is to say, the nation must have its defenses solid, substantial; it must take nothing for granted in a world that is fraught with unrest and uncertainty, racked by suspicion, permeated to the very core with chicanery and scheming of alleged statesmen. The smallest boy will hit him on the chin if the attack is unjustified. That is human nature, and human nature is about the same over the whole world.

A year ago I wrote something in these columns in support of the President's program for building up the army, navy and air corps. It seemed then to be wise. It is certainly shown now to have been the proper course. Our nation is at least partially ready to strike back and the progress thus made has been accomplished without the waste that characterized our movements in 1917.

Noting that I said "partially ready," I want to call attention here to one way in which we are not ready, a condition in which we are quite vulnerable. We have a great army structure on paper. From it, the army can be expanded rapidly and successfully. The air corps can be developed quickly. The navy is being built up. The whole program is one of defense.

Guns and Men

In taking stock of the situation, however, one must give consideration to "replacements." You can have all of the men and all of the ships needed, but if the guns they use can not be replaced when they are worn out, what good are they? I do not mean that we have no reserve. We have a reserve, but war takes its toll of guns as well as men.

Guns are made of steel. Steel is made of manganese, as well as iron. Manganese puts the starch in steel, hardens it so that it is usable for such things as guns along with the million and one other items of tools and equipment that we have to have in our everyday life. No substitute ever has been found for it. The Germans learned this to their sorrow back in 1918. They attempted to use a substitute. Their guns soon buckled. Their heavy artillery was useless.

Thus, we must look to our manganese stores — stores which might suddenly become nonexistent because 93 per cent of all that we use is imported. International trade started our trend in the direction of buying ore abroad where cheap labor is employed. Secretary Hull's policies by which reciprocal trade agreements are worked out have finished the job. We find ourselves in a position, therefore, where we could be cut off overnight from our supply of a material necessity for defense.

This tragic condition exists even when we have vast untapped stores within our own borders and more in Cuba, 90 miles away from our shores. It is true, the bureau of mines tells me, that our ore is a lower grade than that imported from Russia, or from the gold coast of Africa, or from Brazil. It is true moreover that American ore must be treated by a special process before it can be used. It seems to me nevertheless that our nation ought to be made self-sufficient where that can be done and present policies distinctly do not do that. Political and economic views prevent it.

Let us examine this situation in more detail. The great source of manganese at the moment is Soviet Russia. Fifty per cent of all we use is imported from Russia. It is a fact that this is the finest manganese to be found, and it is a further fact that American steel companies sell vast quantities of steel to Russia because they buy manganese there. On the other hand, I believe it is inevitable that Japan and Russia will have to fight it out sooner or later. If they go to war, there is not a chance that we can buy any manganese from that quarter. It will be the long haul from Africa or Brazil thereafter — and a long haul in wartime means grave dangers. With Brazil under a dictatorship, none can foretell what would confront us in that direction.

Now, I included Cuba as a source of supply. It is only because

Cuba Shut Out

American capital has persevered in making available the Cuban manganese deposit. The Cuban-American Manganese corporation has expended large sums for establishing the beneficiation process on a permanent basis. The bureau of mines tells me that corporation has succeeded, but due to Secretary Hull's reciprocal trade policies, even that company can hardly get into the American market. You see, Secretary Hull made a trade treaty with Brazil that reduced the tariff duty by 50 per cent. When that was done, the reduction in duty immediately became available to all nations since we must treat all of them alike. The treaty by Secretary Hull which was approved by President Roosevelt, therefore, spelled death for the chances of development of the manganese mines within our own borders.

To show further how these reciprocal trade policies have ruined our own chances, let me call attention to the fact that the government itself has developed an electrolytic process at the great Boulder dam that will make high grade manganese from the ore in this country. So here we have a government-owned project and a great reserve from Cuba available and nothing can be done about it simply because they can not compete with the cheaper ore from abroad — cheaper because of cheap or forced labor and Secretary Hull's unexplainable cut in tariff duties. Our national policy always insisted on an American standard of living for Americans. That means higher wages. It is a correct policy. But why, I ask, does Secretary Hull destroy a home industry on the one hand and provide for profits of foreigners on the other when we cling to a policy of the kind mentioned?

Of immediate urgency, however, is a supply on hand. Congress passed legislation to provide for a stock-pile, a reserve on hand under ownership of the government itself. That law provided for investment of $40,000,000 which would acquire approximately 1,000,000 tons of manganese. The War department called for bids. Americans, of course, could not compete with foreigners. Even the Cuban company could not make an offer within reach. Something has held up the contract award, however, and there has been delay. I am fearful that some of our steel companies have urged War department specifications that would not permit Americans to participate in the contract because of the low grade ore in this country, but in any event the Hull tariff reduction would hold our mines outside.

I am all for that stock-pile idea. It would be one foundation stone in the wall of defense which I believe the nation ought to have. But that alone would not solve our general problem. We can not continue forever with the present policies. Some time in the future, there will be a war in which this nation will have a part. There can be no doubt of that. So while all of the various planning by the New Deal goes on, why not give thought to development of a defense as well as the more abundant life or protection of the underprivileged.

The White Elephant

THE year 1884 is known in the land as the "white elephant year." P. T. Barnum had seen from Siam a genuine sacred elephant and it drew such a crowd that one of his rivals decided must have a white elephant to compete.

So he whitewashed one of his dromedaries and renamed it the "Light of Asia." The dazzling whiteness of this beast, set off by its black trappings, far outshone the dingy whiteness of Barnum's fine animal. Barnum denounced it as a fake, but to prove it genuine his owners allowed visitors to get into its trunk which had been enlarged. But they didn't dare enter the whole body (the whitewash coat scrubbed off each night) and by hangs a tale. At each performance the "Light of Asia" stripped of its trappings, placed on a platform and beside it stood a "professor" who gave a lecture about the wonderful "Light of Asia." The crowds noticed that the "professor" skipped about as he gave his spiel and wondered why. The reason was that the elephant wanted to make friendly advances to the "professor" and he knew that allowed the "Light" to rub against him, the whitewash might rub off his black coat.

For some time the war of rival "white elephants" went on. Then Barnum made a deal with his competitor to withdraw the "Light of Asia." The next day the elephant was back on the stage but this time in its natural color. Eventually, the "Light of Asia" wound up its career as "Old Light of the favorite 'bulls' of the Ringling circus."

The Lancaster School Board

IT'S an oft-repeated tale — "heavenly" about the school board in Lancaster, Ohio, refusing to have a school house used as the scene of debate on whether or not railroads were practicable. They are quoted as saying that "such things as roads and telegraphs are impracticable and rank infidelity. Nothing in the Word of God teaches them. If God had designed His intelligent creatures to travel at the frightful rate of miles an hour by steam He would have foretold it through His prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls to Hell."

The tale is only half-true. It is a traveler from New York who at a little log school house in South Charleston in Clark county told the pupils about seeing a demonstration of a new "fire engine" in the East. When he took the story home, their parents being conservative folk whose weren't open to new ideas, said school house shouldn't be used for such "trashy talk." So the school board sent a note to the teacher, Hervey Scott, who was secretary of a debating society, telling him to welcome to use the school house to debate all proper questions "such things as railroads. Telegraphs were NOT mentioned in their note because the electric graph hadn't been invented. That came 13 years later.

The story was tacked on to the casket because Scott, later editor of a paper in that town, printed a series of pioneer sketches including this yarn. And that's the best of it. Lancaster citizens have been denying the story ever since. It is a reflection upon the ingenuity of their forefathers.

The Dutch Mail

WHEN type in a print shop comes all mixed up, "pi," and it's also grief for newspaper publisher if it has just before the paper is ready to press. But when it happens an early English editor, he is the best of a bad situation. Richard Phillips was his name. He was editor of the Leicester Mail.

Just before press time one day a "devil" dropped a tray of type as it was about to be put into "forms." There was no time to straighten out all the ensuing confusion so Phillips assembled the scattered type and printed from it in that condition. With it was a notice the "Dutch Mail" (news from Holland) had been received too late to be translated and was therefore being printed just as received.

Thirty years later Phillips is said to have met a reader in Nottingham who had carefully preserved a copy of that paper. He was trying to find someone who could translate the news from Holland.

Four-leaf Clover Legend

Most of us know that a four-leaf clover is supposed to be lucky. Few know why. Here is explanation, given by a writer in Pearson's London Weekly: When Eve was ejected from the Garden of Eden she saw a patch of clover by the gates, and wanting to take with her a tangible memory of the Paradise she had so foolishly lost, she snatched a piece. It had four leaves and ever since then a four-leaf clover has been considered lucky because it has grown from the clover that was in the Garden of Eden.

Clouds Over the Peace Palace

Picture
Parade

EUROPEAN war clouds hover over the new palace of the League of Nations, rising in Ariana park at Geneva, on the sloping shores of Switzerland's fairest lake. Architects of five nations collaborated in executing the Palace of Peace. Ten nationalities were represented in the 500 workmen who built it. But even these elaborate gestures cannot insure the League's permanency. England is lukewarm and several other nations are cold in their disregard. C. E. Boesch, the Geneva photographer who took these pictures, nevertheless found the Palace of Peace a thing of beauty that all nationalities must admire from an artistic point of view. For example, the magnificent council chamber at the right, accommodates 300 delegates, 100 secretaries, 100 delegates, 100 officials, 30 official guests and 500 journalists.

Fate of nations may be decided in committee room No. 8, donated to the League by the Danish government. On its wall committee members see a mural map of the world, illustrated with such symbolic figures as the Indian for North America, the dragon for China and the camel for Africa. Some of these chambers hold 400 to 600 people.

The League's library can accommodate two million books. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gave two million dollars to this cause. Another noteworthy gift is the awe-inspiring painting on the ceiling of the council chamber by Jose-Maria Sert, internationally celebrated artist. The title is "Solidarity of Peoples." What makes League delegates glance at this mural with tongue in cheek is the fact that Sert was a Spanish artist whose painting was the gift of Spain, now in the throes of civil war.

This general view gives an idea of the League's entire home, covering about five acres. All three chief buildings front on the Court of Honor facing the lake. In the center is the assembly hall, at its left the council chamber, at its right the library.

Duckbill Dinosaur Had Lots of Teeth but Lived on Plants

Washington.—Duckbill dinosaurs weren't at all like ducks when it came to the matter of teeth. They had about the finest dental mills any animal in the world has ever possessed, C. W. Gilmore, curator of vertebrate paleontology at the United States National museum, pointed out in the course of an illustrated lecture here. Two thousand teeth, ranged in rows both horizontal and vertical, formed a fair average equipment for one of them.

But it was all right, even for the creatures that inhabited the earth at the same time. Duckbill dinosaurs were quite harmless, feeding entirely on plants. Much more formidable were the fewer teeth in the jaws of the tyrannosaurs; their six-inch spikes, shaped like barracuda teeth but ten times bigger, were terrible tearers of flesh.

To get back to the duckbills; they not only had these batteries of many hundreds of teeth ready for immediate action at all times, but they had plenty more where they came from. If a tooth was worn out or broken, it was immediately replaced. Back of all the teeth were tooth buds ready to grow new ones, so a duckbill never had to worry about a toothless old age.

"Dippy's" Teeth Like a Rake.

A much bigger dinosaur, also a plant-eater yet with fewer and weaker teeth, was Diplodocus, of which the National museum has a fine skeleton. "Dippy's" teeth were all in the front end of his jaws, and they were slender and rake-like. He had no real chewing teeth at all. It is therefore conjectured that Diplodocus raked up soft vegetation from the swamps and shallow lakes where he wallowed and gulped the mess down whole, to be ground up in his gizzard by the bushel or so of stones he habitually kept inside for that purpose.

Not all the vegetarian dinosaurs were creatures of mild and inoffensive habits. The ceratopsians, which had formidable horns projecting forward from their heads, and wide, bony frills to protect their necks, must have been the wild bulls of the Age of Reptiles. Mr. Gilmore told of numerous finds of horned dinosaur skeletons which show broken ribs, punctured frills, and horns snapped off, all with evidence of healing afterwards, which indicated that these injuries had been received in the course of truculently active lives.

New Steels Due to Molecule Studies

Philadelphia.—American industry is entering a new era in the manufacture and use of "tailor-made" steels adapted to a wide variety of purposes and made possible by scientists studying iron molecule by molecule, the Franklin Institute here was told by Dr. John Johnston, director of research for the United States Steel corporation.

Control of the heating and cooling of iron and steel during its manufacture so as to change the point at which iron changes from its "alpha" form to its "gamma" phase is making possible new types of material that can be fitted to new needs, he asserted.

"A generation ago," he stated, "the technical problems facing the steel industry were related mainly to increased production of a few kinds of steel, but today the object is to improve the fitness of steel at no greater over-all cost to the public."

Iron is now known to exist in two forms, the alpha and gamma types, he explained. These two types, which differ in physical properties sufficiently to enable engineers to adapt them to practical use, owe their existence to different arrangements of iron atoms in the iron molecule. And the change from one type to the other can be controlled by the processing which the iron receives.

The emphasis on the iron and steel business today is on producing corrosion-proof metals, he said. Stainless steel, most prominent member of the corrosion-resistant family, is valuable, among other things, because it does not rust and thin sheets can be used without the fear that they will be damaged by long exposure.

Mayan Turkish Baths

Philadelphia.—Ancient American Turkish baths have been discovered in ruins of the Mayan city of Piedrola by the University museum of the University of Pennsylvania.

Eskimos Defeated Invading Norsemen in Arctic Regions

Washington.—An Arctic war long before the days of Columbus, waged in the ice and snow of America's Arctic between white invading Norsemen and native Eskimos, is now being discovered by science.

To the Smithsonian institution here, a modern Norseman, Dr. Therkel Mathiasen of the Danish National museum, reports that Greenland's Arctic earth is relinquishing tragic trophies of Norsemen massacred when the white pioneers of about 1350 attempted to get a foothold in the New World. These could not be peaceful gifts, Dr. Mathiasen reasons, for Norsemen would never have given natives their church bells to turn into hammers or eardrums.

Dr. Mathiasen, who has spent nine summers exploring the Canadian Arctic and Greenland for clues to the Eskimos' prehistory, found the Eskimo village containing these Norse relics at a little island called Inugsuk, off northwest Greenland.

The Eskimo story, so far pieced together, shows Eskimo migrations in a rough way for the past thousand years. A village site in the Canadian Arctic, unearthed by a Danish expedition in 1922, revealed ancient Eskimos there who had been whale and seal hunters and who used materials obtained from these sea creatures in their houses, clothes, and utensils. These Eskimos had probably come originally eastward from Alaska or Siberia. Some reached Greenland and became its first Eskimo inhabitants.

Eskimos Beat Norsemen.

The site at Inugsuk, Greenland, containing Norse relics, shows these Eskimos at a later time, when they had acquired new inventions, and even seem to have borrowed ideas from medieval Norsemen, who were five or six hundred miles away to the south. Linking these Eskimos with the Norse settlers enables archeologists to date this state of Eskimo culture definitely in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth centuries.

This was the era when Eskimos and Norsemen fought it out. The Eskimos won. Like Indians in the United States, the Eskimos did not start fighting white men in earnest for some time after their arrival. Eric the Red had discovered Greenland in 985, and Norse colonies were soon planted, but it was not until about 1200 that Norsemen in Greenland saw their first Eskimos. Dr. Mathiasen explains that this was because the Eskimos clung to northern latitudes, suitable for dog sledges and their ice hunting, but later the Eskimos spread southward and in the Fourteenth century they were attacking Norse settlements, burning Norse houses, after blocking the doors, taking savage vengeance on captives, and plundering the smoking ruins after a massacre.

Norse in Greenland were by this time a degenerate, pitiful set of colonists, as archeologists have shown by finding the skeletons marked by signs of malnutrition and sickness. By the time Columbus arrived in the New World, the Greenland wars were won—by the Eskimos.

Sea Serpent's Skull Found by a California Student

Berkeley, Calif.—A fossilized skull of a mosasaur—a huge serpentine sea-reptile which lived during the upper Cretaceous geologic period, some 60,000,000 years ago, has been found near the town of Gustine, Calif., by Allan Bannison, a sophomore in the University of California here. It is the first mosasaur skull to be found west of the Rockies.

The skull is about two feet long, and is six inches in width at its broadest point. It was found embedded in a sandstone formation on the side of a hill. It has been given to the university's museum of paleontology for study.

S. P. Welles, field laboratory assistant in the museum, says the reptile was about 18 feet long, with a slender, snake-like body. Its limbs resembled paddles with which it propelled its way through the water. Its tail was somewhat fan-like in shape, and served as a scull to guide its passage.

Papa Gorilla Cares Well for Family

Washington.—Papa Gorilla is good family head, most solicitous for the welfare of his dependents, according to observations made in East Africa by Capt. C. R. S. Pittman, published in the annual report of the Smithsonian institution.

If danger threatens, the females and the young are sent off, while the big male stays back to see what's going on, and if developments are not to his liking he stands his ground to take on all comers until he is satisfied that the rest of the band are out of harm's way, says Captain Pittman. When the family is well away, the head of the household may sometimes "start something" without waiting to be attacked.

Change Wishes to Stitches

"GEE, if I could only afford that darling dress I saw the other day—I'd give my left arm—!" We who are addicted to pretty clothes and subject to the usual feminine foibles (but not too well-blessed financially) often make a wish like this, don't we? Ah, but here's good news, Milady! Thanks to Modern Sew-Your-Own you can make all your wishes come true on the "pretty percentage" basis. You may have "that darling dress" at half the price (you won't have to give up your left arm either). Why not decide today to sew, sew, Sew-Your-Own?

Looking to Spring.

The frock at the left has never been in anybody's window, but you can bet your bottom dollar it's going to be seen this spring wherever style is of first importance. It interprets the mode in a young and graceful manner. And because it's a Sew-Your-Own original it's the last word in simplicity. Make it either with long or short sleeves in lame, sheer wool, satin, or velvet.

Pajamas for Madame.

Pajamas that make you want to wake up and live; pajamas that help you sleep like a log—is that the kind you have in mind, Milady? You can depend upon today's model either in taffeta or velvet for leisure; cotton flannel, silk crepe or seersucker for sleepy time. Make this becoming style in duplicate while you're about it.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Egg Celery Sandwich.—Chop hard-cooked eggs up fine and season them with salt and pepper. Add half as much finely chopped celery and enough mayonnaise to make the mixture easy to spread.

Saving Leather Chair.—The comfortable old leather chair that was sent to the attic years ago because the leather had finally become shabby can be made usable again if the worn part is concealed by a slip-cover. If it is covered in nice, dark blue the chair may be used winter and summer.

Save Chicken Fat.—Chicken fat may be used as a butter substitute in cooking. Consequently, it is a good plan to save the fat from boiled, stewed or fried chicken.

Washing Window Shades.—Soiled window shades may be washed by spreading each shade on a flat surface and then rubbing it with a clean cloth or sponge and soapsuds.

Wax Linoleum.—Linoleum wears better if it is polished with floor wax instead of washed. The wax preserves and hardens and gives a good polish.

and be the perfectly groomed pajama girl all-around-the-clock.

To Start the Day.

A good way to start your day, Miss Keep-the-Home-Beautiful, is to wear a dress that makes you pretty as a picture. The model at the right will do just that. Furthermore, you will be thrilled to see how easy it goes together. It's fun to Sew-Your-Own, because then you can choose the color that does things for you, and you may enjoy variety of fabrics with the difference you save by sewing. Won't you join us today—one pattern will convince you that Sew-Your-Own "really has something there."

Still Coughing?

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, chest cold, or bronchial irritation, you can get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing and you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent than Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids nature to soothe and heal the inflamed mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm.

Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the benefits obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—not two, and it has no hyphen in it. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, and you'll get the genuine product and the relief you want. (Adv.)

Are Women Better Shoppers than Men?

GRANTING a woman's reputation for wise buying, let's trace the methods by which she has earned it. Where does she find out about the advantages and details of electrical refrigeration? What tells her how to keep the whole household clean—rugs, floors, bathroom tiling—and have energy left over for golf and parties? How does she learn about new and delicious entrees and desserts that surprise and delight her family? Where does she discover those subtleties of dress and make-up that a man appreciates but never understands?

Why, she reads the advertisements. She is a consistent, thoughtful reader of advertisements, because she has found that she can believe them—and profit thereby. Overlooking the advertisements would be depriving herself of data continuously useful in her job of Purchasing Agent to the Family.

For that matter, watch a wise man buy a car or a suit or an insurance policy. Not a bad shopper himself! He reads advertisements, too!

ELECTRIC FENCE GOES ALONG WITH PROGRESS

America's farm fences are going along with the march of time. A single strand of electrically-charged barbed wire is displacing the old type four to six strand wire fence and other multi-assorted barrier. The controller unit is automatic. Neither rain nor snow affects its operation. Through a highly perfected series of electric apparatuses the current from a light socket or battery is controlled in voltage. It may be turned high or low, on or off, thus allowing for safety and effectiveness in holding livestock. The wire is rigged high enough so that cattle may graze on weeds underneath or the weeds may be cut with a mower, eliminating fence-line weeds. Expensive fences, too, are eliminated. A single wire the width of a gate, a gate hook and spring are all that are needed. Actual operation of the fence is simple. The livestock touch the wire, establishing a contact with the ground, and after finding out the wire's potency rarely have the desire to "wander." The line fence is dangerous only when connected directly to a power line. There is no danger when the current passes through a controller unit.

British Constitution Is for Most Part Unwritten

Although the British Constitution is for the most part unwritten and a result of custom, its development is marked by certain fundamental written laws, says a writer in London Tit-Bits Magazine.

It was Magna Charta, signed in 1215, that secured for the nation the system of annual parliaments, and the free and unfettered administration of justice. The habeas corpus act of 1679 secured to the people the liberty of the person—no longer could a man be imprisoned at the whim of a feudal lord or sovereign; a magistrate's warrant was required.

In 1701 the act of settlement provided for the Protestant succession to the throne, which later became hereditary in the British house of Windsor. The sons of the sovereign and their descendants have precedence over daughters; the daughters and their descendants having preference over all lateral lines.

Other notable landmarks in the development of the British constitution are the act of union with Scotland (1707); the government of Ireland act (1920); and the statute of Westminster, passed in 1931.

When Indian, White Said Adieu
Not infrequently an Ohio Indian tribe would permit an adopted white man or woman to say adieu to the tribe if the person, upon reaching adulthood, found life with the redskins unbearable. The departures differed, states a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, but they were generally something like the one which is recorded about William Wells. Kidnaped when a boy of twelve, he lived with the tribe until manhood. Then walking with Chief Little Turtle to a clearing on the Maumee, Wells said: "I now leave your nation for my own people. We have long been friends. We are friends yet—until the sun reaches a certain height"—which he indicated by pointing to the sky—"From that time on, we are enemies. Then, if you want to kill me, you may, and if I want to kill you, I may." Wells became the chief of Gen. "Mad" Anthony Wayne's scouts

Fen Eagles
Fen eagles were famous in the Eighteenth century for the quantities of fish they devoured off the Norfolk coast. One of them, shot down in Suffolk in 1810, measured nine feet across the wings. The high rewards given for their capture played a great part in their extermination. One hundred years ago, says the Montreal Herald, anybody who destroyed an eagle in the Orkneys was entitled to the gift of a hen from every household in the nearest village.

Sleighting at Zakopane
Carved and gaily painted, the native sleighs are the first thing that strike the eyes of winter visitors to Zakopane, Poland. The drivers are Gorals, or mountaineers, in white trousers, elaborately embroidered, and sheepskin waistcoats, with a little hat perched jauntily on their heads, and their sleighs are the favorite kind of winter transportation.

Flower Capital
Ghent, Belgium, where the world's first hothouse was built over 300 years ago, is called by its residents the flower capital of the world. Its suburbs have miles of hothouses, in which orchids, begonias, lilies and carnations are grown for all Europe, and in summer acres of other flowers are grown in the country surrounding it.

Walls of Ancient Forts
Stand Guard Over City

Early in its reign as the Queen City of the Caribbean, Cartagena was strongly fortified. Historians have estimated that the walls about the port cost half a billion dollars in time, labor and loss of life. When Ferdinand VI of Spain was presented with the accounts of the building of the great fortifications he is reported to have climbed to the top of the tower of his castle and to have peered long and wistfully toward the west. When courtiers inquired as to what he was seeking he replied: "I am trying to see the walls of Cartagena, because such a tremendous expenditure should have created such a conspicuous architecture that it ought to be visible from here."

The old forts of San Jose and San Fernando guard the mouth of the river leading up to Cartagena, while those off Manzanillo and Castillo Grande are attractive old sentinels closer to the city. All these ports were effectively used against pirates in the olden days. The channel from the sea runs a zigzag course for several miles through low jungle-grown banks to a beautiful land-locked bay, where Cartagena looms beyond a lagoon, compact within its encircling ramparts and topped by mosque-like domes and Moorish towers, looking much as it did in the days of the buccaneers. Many of the buildings date back to 1533.

—KHS— SPORTS CHATTER (by "Flash")

If a few of the bashful boys in school would help the girls yell, there would be more volume. Come on, you boys, help the girls yell! What was wrong with the basketball team against Woden? Maybe they have the big head. The fans better not praise them up too much. Did you notice Klemme had seven men on the floor for awhile in the second team game. We don't need that many men to beat Woden, surely. Maybe the scorekeeper better learn how to count, or can't he see? Mascot Wille better hang up the suits after the games, instead of running off. They are getting to look pretty wrinkled. Wille. The team went to Des Moines for the coaching conference during vacation. How much do you think they learned about basketball? The basketball team out to chip in and buy Capt. Schultdt a comb for his hair.

—KHS— DRAMATIC NEWS

Paul Schultdt, Elsie Thiemann, Elsie Ward, Edith Bachman and Marie Schmidt are out for declamatory. They will start working on their pieces next week.

As soon as the play books arrive and the characters are selected, we will start working on the one-act plays for the contest. There is a large number out for the plays this year.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

The American Literature class has been trying their luck at writing poetry. Some of the students turned out to be surprisingly good poets.

Everyone is dreading this week, because of the Semester tests.

The freshman girls are taking microscopic tests in home economics. We have been detecting the different materials by burning the fibers and by placing them under the microscope. Also, we have counted the number of threads in the warp and filling on a single square inch of material. We are now detecting the different weaves in the cloth.

The American History class has almost completed Book I of their Study Lesson Assignments.

Evelyn Arnold has added her name to the perfect test paper list in the beginning typing classes. Thursday she wrote 27 words a minute on a five minute speed test.

—KHS— ????

Elmer has made a New Year's resolution not to take out any girls. I would like to have the girls help him to keep his resolution.

We would like to know if the girls that Elmer and Buster had out while in Des Moines were as good looking as the boys said.

Evelyn has been using a number of nice handkerchiefs lately. Where did you get them Evelyn? (Maybe Freddie knows something about it.)

If anyone wants to get a dignified walk, a copyright may be obtained from a certain senior boy if desired. (Guess who?)

We all agree that we should chip in and buy Marian a pair of glasses so she can see the chair she is supposed to sit on and so she won't have to stumble over desks, or maybe we better keep Paul out of her sight.

Grades 1 and 2

Noel and Phyllis K. have been absent this week.

Esther had a birthday party on Monday.

The second graders took a vocabulary test on Wednesday. Donna and Esther had perfect scores.

Grades 3 and 4 Ruth Bell—Reporter

Our radio lesson this week was "Songs and Games of England." We listened to the story, "The Helpful Mouse."

The third graders had their first number drill this week. The class median was average.

The fourth graders are getting ready for a journey to Eskimo Land. We have been doing reference reading in the library.

We made snow men in art class. Each one made his snow man like he wanted it.

The fourth grade reading class is working on the snow unit from their Weekly Readers. We are making a snow booklet. There are snow poems, stories, and pictures in it.

Miss Azeltine is reading us "The Eskimo Twins," by Lucy Fitch Perkins.

We played singing games in music class.

Clarence, Roger Ridder, and Willis haven't been to school the past week.

Grades 5 and 6 Lawrence Bock and Wesley Suckow—Reporters

We have ended another health contest. Junior's side won. Our dental honor roll is getting larger. One half of the boys and girls have brought back their cards, making nine names on the roll.

Eunice Larsen is out this week with the whooping cough. Everyone else was back after vacation.

Children have been bringing more new books to school for others to read. Ewald brought his puzzle map of the United States to school for us to put together. It is fun because we are studying the United States in Geography.

Grades 7 and 8

We have been busy this week finishing our work for the first semester. On Wednesday afternoon we listened to a radio program.

Lorraine Buntentbach is librarian or this week.

Those who received 100 per cent in spelling are: Melvin Coobs, Betty Etchen, Eugene Haberkamp, Leonard Kaduce and Caroline Schwartz.

Nature's Writing Found on Lake Erie Limestone

One of the most notable examples of nature's handwriting is to be found at Kelley Island, in Lake Erie, not far from the Ohio city of Sandusky. Here every crag tells to the initiated in nature's handwriting what took place in the Ice age, says a writer in the New York Times.

A number of years ago, while blasting the limestone of which the island is composed, workmen noticed that the surface of the rock uncovered was oddly carved. Over the limestone there is a twenty-foot layer of unstratified rock, sand and gravel. Geologists examined the grooves and carvings on the limestone taken from beneath this covering and reported them to be remarkable imprints left by glaciers.

The grooves are from four to six feet deep. The limestone contains shells of marine creatures, and the shells have been polished until they resemble inlay work.

The ancient Egyptians wrote on the leaf of the papyrus plant; the American Indians on birch bark; but nature in leaving her written message to man compressed millions of animal organisms into a tablet of limestone, and inscribed it with a stylus of granite and fingers of ice perhaps miles in thickness.

Strewn over the northern part of Ohio are granite boulders of all sizes. Their place of origin was in Canada, north of the Great Lakes.

It is concluded that they were transported by moving ice, and the grooves on Kelley island limestone shows some of the work they did on their passage south.

RADIO SINGERS WILL GIVE PROGRAM AT HIGH SCHOOL

An outstanding entertainment comes to Klemme next Wednesday evening, Jan. 19th, at eight o'clock, when the Mississippian Singers, a negro male quintet, give an entertainment at the high school auditorium. This is the second of a series of three lyceum numbers furnished our school this year by the Northwest Assemblies of Minneapolis. The first number was an afternoon entertainment by Juanita McComb, artist and bird imitator.

The group consists of a negro male quartet and a tap-dancer and guitar player. These entertainers have won laurels on the Pacific Coast as the Mississippi Crew of the CROSS CUTS program, a regular feature over the National Broadcasting Company from San Francisco. This is perhaps the first time that any entertainment from a national radio hookup has appeared in Klemme.

The Mississippian Singers will bring to Klemme the haunting, sweet melodies of the old plantation songs and the negro spirituals from which much true American music has developed. They will vary their program with the gaiety and rhythm of the clogger and the strumming of the banjo under skilled fingers.

MASON LODGES MET AT GARNER LAST WEEK

District Meeting Attended By 117; Conducted By A. L. Hotchkins

GARNER—Members of 15 lodges of the Masonic order attended the district meeting which closed Thursday night following a two day session conducted by A. L. Hotchkins of Mason City, district lecturer.

Dr. C. E. Wright of Clear Lake, past grand master, and John Ames chairman of the board of custodians and a past grand master, of Traer, were among the high officials here.

There was a total attendance of 117 here for the session.

MORE EFFECTIVE WEED FIGHT IS ANTICIPATED

This is going to be a "bad year" on Iowa's weed crop.

Weed control and eradication measures are being studied in nearly 90 per cent of the counties by farmers and township weed commissioners, R. H. Porter, Iowa State College extension plant pathologist reports.

In 86 counties weed eradication and control projects were incorporated into the 1938 Farm Bureau program. Meetings, demonstrations, and discussions will be held in these counties to combat the weed problem. In these and additional counties weed commissioners are working independent or cooperative programs.

Porter says that a recent survey of Iowa counties shows that at least 11 have appointed county weed commissioners to enforce the new state law. Of the counties that do not have county weed commissioners to head the control campaign last year.

County weed commissioners are now working in Muscatine, O'Brien, Des Moines, Appanoose, Dallas, Cherokee, Plymouth, Cerro Gordo, Crawford, Buena Vista and Shelby counties. The Cerro Gordo weed commissioner has three assistants and the Buena Vista commissioner has five district men.

PATROLMEN WILL TAKE PICTURES OF CRASHES

DES MOINES, (AP)—John Hattery, chief of the Iowa highway patrol, said state highway patrolmen are being instructed in the use of cameras so they can obtain pictures of accident scenes. The pictures will be used to determine the cause of accidents and for use in court.

You Must Have a Glamorous Blouse

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THERE is a disposition among designers this season to create "above-the-table" effects, as they please to term it, and this is where the blouse of gleaming lame weave plays a stellar role. Your jacket or caped suit or your fur coat may be as conservative as you may insist but when it comes to the blouse underneath witness a blaze of glory when it is revealed. For a fact, the smartest dress-up blouses are just like that, this season.

What's more, though it's hard to believe, notwithstanding its unmistakable-luxury appeal, when it comes right down to figuring it out a blouse of gorgeous sparkling metal cloth is a perfectly safe and sane adventure in economy. How so? Well, it dresses you up at a moment's notice and accommodates itself under a friendly jacket when you do not want to be too dressed up. And if you are in the "make your own" class, all that's needed is a yard or so of handsome fabric, a simple pattern and a determination to do and dare in order to acquire as elegant a blouse as dreams may picture.

Not that the ready-made blouse is prohibitive in price, on the contrary it's surprising what lovely models are to be had these days at comparatively little cost. For formal wear silk lame is favored not only for its smartness but because the silk core reduces tarnishing hazards. As to the newer styling the blouses that look festive with much glamour and glitter feature the same corseted waist, high bust line, draped bodice and close fitting neck seen in the smartest dresses. Many silk blouses completing formal afternoon suits show sleeve interest concentrated on top. Pin tucking, shirring, cutout or contrasting encrustations of mat on brilliant or vice versa are used as trimming for otherwise simple blouses.

To the right in the picture we show a turquoise silk lame blouse with an artfully gathered bodice and flange points at the neck which makes it a 1937 model. This attractive style is also adapted to large sizes in which the corset effect is modified. The points of the collar may be turned down for the shorter neck.

The blouse to the left is the last word in modish detail. Firstly, it plays up glitter and glamour to a finish. Secondly, it carries the message of stripes, and the matter of stripes in elegant fabrics, especially in luxurious lames, is very important this season. In this instance the material is black and silver lame. Then too this blouse proclaims the very advance and widely heralded high surplice model which is fashioned along the new mated line. And please to take note of the cunning hat and whimsical veil. Yes indeed, this ensemble is a perfect criterion of what to wear when you go stepping during the mid-winter social whirl.

If not a blouse of glittering lame then choose a shirtmaker cocktail dress of silver weave like the one pictured in the center background. This type is a perennial favorite, and somehow they look prettier than ever this season. See the clever little pocket with the decorative monogram embroidered in green silk. No lame shirtmaker dress can afford to be without a cunning pocket like this, to our way of thinking. And the adorable hat with its devastating veil done with the usual Lilly Dache artistry, what more could a debutante desire?

CURL COIFFURE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

"Fashions may change, pompadors may give way to bobs for a time, but they come back again," explained Charles Dana Gibson in discussing his famed Gibson Girl of the 1890s on his recent birthday. And now New York and Paris arbiters of fashion confess that the new styles for Palm Beach and Southern wear have been to a great extent inspired by the Gibson Girl. The "1937 Gibson Girl" shown here glories in a modern pompadour curl coiffure which Twentieth-century science has made it possible for her to arrange herself with one of the new automatic bob pin curlers. This beauty gadget shoots curls into the hair in almost the twinkling of an eye. It works so easily and simply the curls can even be done after slipping on this striking two-piece flame-colored chiffon evening gown made with an ingeniously sleeved capelet to slip on after dancing. The gown is made tight fitting along corseted lines, draped over the bosom with a low front and back.

VERSATILE PUMPS HIGHLIGHT FASHION

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Pumps in every imaginable interpretation are conspicuously in the foreground now and will be even more so in the spring showings. There is a new seamless kind that spells comfort itself at the same time that it makes the foot look small because of its glove-like fit.

The open-throat pumps are hailed with delight as they do away with the cut-in discomfort across the instep. Other pumps are sandalized attractively while others are fashioned along d'orsay lines. For the many who love pumps but do not have pump feet there are soft step ins styled in fascinating variety.

Tunic Blouses Styled on Modern Greyhound Lines

With "greyhound" lines, Mainbocher's ideal for daytime, slim tunic blouses are shown with dark suits and handknit sweaters come well down over the neckline instead of stopping at the waist. The illusion of the length is achieved on dresses with stitching or beading to give a two-piece effect in front with natural waistline in back, detail accentuates the bustline and gives a long, slim waist, and suit coats are from hip to three-quarter length.

Daytime Furs Have More Variety Than Ever Before

Daytime furs this season have more variety than ever before, with three-quarters boxy coats for sports, classic dress coats and jackets of every conceivable description. Short sleeves are outstanding in the Revillon collection. Jackets and coats of three-quarters length are made with elbow-length puffed sleeves, the costumes worn with matching long gloves. A mink daytime jacket has capelike loose sleeves to the elbow.

Barrel Sweater

The barrel sweater is becoming a campus favorite.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

THE best motion picture of years, according to the figures on the cash registers, is "Nothing Sacred." This mad and merry story through which Carole Lombard and Fredric March scramble draws such crowds to theaters wherever it plays that engagements are being extended even in smaller towns where two-day showings are the usual rule. In big cities, it looks as if "Nothing Sacred" had settled down to spend the whole winter.

Carole plays the role of a village beauty who comes into national prominence when a doctor says that she has radium poisoning and will live but briefly. They soon find that he was mistaken, but in the meantime a metropolitan newspaper has assigned one of their reporters, Fredric March, to fill her last days with enough excitement to act as a circulation builder for the paper. Hilariously the picture pokes fun at newspapers, doctors, night clubs, publicity seekers, and the gullible public.

Fredric March

New combinations of stars have proven so popular at the box office that Hollywood producers are vying with each other thinking up extravagant star-studded casts for their new pictures. Columbia is going to have Grace Moore share top billing with Edith Fellowes, whose singing in "Little Miss Roughneck" is a thrilling surprise. Bing Crosby and Fred MacMurray are going to be teamed in "Harmony for Three." Jack Benny is going to abandon musicals for once to appear opposite glamour-girl Franciska Gaal in "Never Say Die."

Before starting his picture for Warner Brothers, Rudy Vallee rushed back to New York for a night club engagement. Popular as ever, if not more so, he drew such crowds that hundreds were turned away. One old friend who managed to get a ringside table was Frances Langford. Called to the stage to be introduced to the crowd, Frances told, with tears streaming unashamedly down her cheeks, how much it meant to her to have Rudy Vallee send for her a few years ago to sing on his program.

Gonzaga university certainly started something when it awarded Bing Crosby a doctor's degree in music. Now Northwestern university's going to bestow the honorary degree of "Doctor of Innuendo and Snappy Comeback" on Charlie McCarthy. Edgar Bergen, Charlie's mentor, worked his way through college at this same Northwestern by presenting Charlie in shows.

Leopold Stokowski is slated to receive various honorary awards for advancing the cause of classical music on the screen in "One Hundred Men and a Girl." But Stokowski believes that Mickey Mouse can do even more to popularize great music. He has offered to arrange and direct the score of "Sorcerer's Apprentice" for Mickey. Don't be surprised if it is advertised as "One Hundred Men and a Mouse."

Bette Davis is going to school two hours a day to learn just the right Southern accent for "Jezebel" and Professor Dalton Raymond, formerly of Louisiana State university, reports that she is progressing wonderfully. Incidentally, one of the very small roles in this picture is played by Henry O'Neill who knew Bette Davis and Henry Fonda, co-stars, nine years ago when they were all with the Cape Cod Playhouse. O'Neill was the star then. Fonda painted scenery and Bette was an usher.

Bette Davis

ODDS AND ENDS—"Three on a Match," the picture that launched Joan Blondell, Bette Davis and Ann Dvorak toward stardom will be remade featuring Warner Brothers' newest discoveries, Lana Turner, Gloria Dickson and Mary Maguire. The bearded outlaw of "Robin Hood" had to clank tankards of root beer instead of the ale the script called for, because Bidwell Park, where the scenes were filmed, was endowed by a prohibitionist. Jean Herscholt's scripts for "Dr. Christian" are rapidly becoming treasured items of collectors. The veteran screen star, graduate of the Copenhagen Arts school, covers the margins with sketches during rehearsal. Spencer Bentley played both Betty and Bob on a recent broadcast when Betty Keller fainted just before broadcast time. Early in his stage career, he did a female impersonation act so he wasn't nervous.

Malta, Comino and Gozo.

Malta Is Great Britain's Base In Middle of the Mediterranean

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

MALTA, Great Britain's mid-Mediterranean base, is an island of palaces and churches, and the governor of Malta is probably more interestingly housed than any other colonial administrator.

In Valletta he has, though it is now mainly used for official purposes, the massive Palace of the Grand Masters, with its magnificent state apartments, its armory with one of the finest collections of armor in the world, and its tapestry chamber with a superb set of Gobelin tapestries. These were made for that very room at the end of the Seventeenth century by order of the Spanish Grand Master Perellos and they are as well preserved in coloring and texture as if they had been completed yesterday.

The throne room served as the original chapter hall of the British Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, and is adorned with a contemporary frieze depicting various incidents in the siege of Malta.

Adjoining one side of the palace is the library, the last building of importance to be erected in Malta by the order and containing a notable collection of manuscripts, books, charts, deeds, and armorial bindings connected with the order. The archives of the knights, dating back to the period of their rule in Rhodes, which Bonaparte had not time to remove, are housed in another of the departments of the government.

Except in the hot summer months, the governor usually resides in the Palace of San Antonio, between Valletta and Notabile, whose gardens, open to the public, are celebrated.

The summer residence is the lordly feudal castle of the Sixteenth century that dominates the southern end of the island and was built by the splendor-loving Verdala, the only one of Malta's grand masters who was at the same time a cardinal of the Roman church. This moated fortress is surrounded by the Boschetto gardens, containing the sole wood in these islands so bare of trees. There Verdala and guests were wont to hunt the gazelles which he imported from the north African mainland.

Auberges of the Knights.

The Knights of the Seven Languages, or nations (later eight), into which the order was divided, were lodged in their several auberges, or hostels. These auberges, magnificent buildings for the most part retaining their original features unimpaired, are still in use. That of Italy now is the museum; that of Castile, the finest of all, serves as naval and military headquarters; that of Auvergne houses the courts of justice; that of Provence, with its magnificent dining room, the Union club. The Anglo-Bavarian auberge is a school, those of Aragon and France serve government purposes.

The division into Langues, so characteristic of this international Order, is manifest also in the sumptuous Co-cathedral of St. John in Valletta, among whose principal features are the richly decorated chapels set apart for each of the Order's component nations. What with these, and its tombs of the grand masters, its heraldic paving stones of members of the order, and its tapestries likewise given by Grand Master Perellos, not Gobelin this time, but masterpieces of the Brussels factory, some woven from cartoons by Rubens, St. John's is one of the most brilliant churches in Christendom.

Beautifully crowning a rocky scarp that rises picturesquely almost in the middle of the island, the small fortified burgh called Mdina in Maltese is one of the most unspoiled of all medieval and Renaissance towns. It also is known by its other names of Notabile, or Citta Vecchia, because King Alfonso of Aragon called it the most notable jewel in his crown. It was the capital of Malta before the knights came and Grand Master La Valette built the city which bears his name.

Nobility of Malta.

Consisting almost entirely of convents, churches, and the roomy, stately palaces of the Maltese nobility, surrounded by a moat and by a complete cincture of walls and bastions that rise superbly above the plain, with narrow, shadowy streets along which sandaled friars pad their silent way, streets so narrow that the sky appears above them only as a narrow streak of blue, Notabile is indeed a gem of a bygone era and a haunt of ancient peace.

Malta has its own nobility, recognized by the Court of St. James', with an official precedence granted by the Maltese government and its own committee of privileges.

There are 25 of these Maltese peerages, most of them feudal titles granted by the grand masters, but one of them goes back to the Fourteenth century. The present holder of this venerable title and the premier noble of Malta is the Most Noble Mary Inganez, baroness in her own right of Diar-il-Bniet and Bukana.

This lady resides in an ancient and beautiful palace in Notabile. The Baroness Inganez represents, among many other families, the ancient Maltese clan of Sceberas, which once owned the promontory on which Grand Master La Valette built the city of Valletta. The head of the Sceberas family at that time, so tradition has it, generously gave the land on which the grand master's palace was erected, to be held by the grand masters on a perpetual leasehold for the annual payment of five grains of wheat and the offering of a glass of water from the palace well.

The water was to be offered to the head of the Sceberas family by the grand master himself in the hall of the grand council, now the throne room, or Hall of St. Michael and St. George.

It is a peculiarity of the Maltese titles that, although they include the ranks of marquis, count, and baron, there is no distinction in seniority between the ranks, precedence being determined solely by the date of creation. Some of the titles are sonorous in the extreme, as examples will show: marquis of St. George, Marquis Testaferrata Oliver, baron of Ghariexem and Tabia, baron of Benuarrat, marquis of Gni-en Is-Sultan, count of Ghain Tuffeja.

Maltese Are Good Farmers.

The principal industry of the islands is agriculture, and the Maltese, despite the stony nature of their land, are skillful and industrious farmers with a wonderful knack of extracting the utmost from the soil, despite methods still somewhat primitive.

Maltese potatoes and Maltese oranges have a high reputation, vegetables are good, while wheat does well where there is room to grow it. But the islands can produce only a fraction of their annual consumption of cereals, and much has to be imported from outside.

Among the most typical of the modern survivals from the era of the knights are the underground granaries in the open space between Valletta and Floriana. These are sealed with round stone lids and still are used for conserving the island's stocks of imported grain.

The lacemaking industry is traditional, and cloth is beginning to be woven from locally grown cotton. The countryside cannot be called grand, but Malta itself, and still more the sister-island of Gozo, are pleasantly green in winter and a rich red in March and April when the clover is in flower. Later the freshness of winter and spring gives way to a brown aridity.

Cicero referred to Malta as a land of honey and roses, while the Maltese like to call their country the "flower of the world." This term, if held to refer only to scenery and vegetation, might seem to verge on the excessive. If it be taken to apply to the many-sidedness of Malta's interests and amenities, it is not altogether without justification.

Solidly Built Up of Stone.

Because of the density of population, the paucity of soil, and the abundance of excellent building stone, which in the course of ages takes on a beautiful golden patina, the proportion of Malta's area that is built on is exceptionally high.

And every corner of the islands is eloquent of the history of the Knights of Malta. In towns, villages, and even the tiny islands of Comino, from whose stony fields, where is cultivated the cumin seed from which the island takes its name, there rise the massive square keeps which they scattered throughout their territory.

The villages, called casals in Malta, are not villages in the ordinary sense. They are compact stone townships of tall houses and narrow streets, solidly built in good substantial baroque architecture and sometimes holding a population running into five figures.

Lesson for January 9

PREPARING FOR A LIFE OF SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare ye the way of the Lord.—Mark 1:3.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Was Baptized.
JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus Was Baptized.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Getting Ready to Serve.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Dedicating Our Lives to Service.

"The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ"—what an interesting expression! Did it not begin back before the foundation of the world? Yes, for the death of Christ was no mere afterthought in God's plan. But now we have the coming into the world of the One who was the Lamb slain from before the world's founding. Jesus Christ is about to appear to begin his ministry which was to culminate at Calvary's cross.

Before Jesus, comes the one sent to proclaim his appearing, to herald the coming of the Servant of God. Mark begins his account with the ministry of John the Baptist and makes no reference to the birth and genealogy of Jesus. How appropriate that is, for after all the important thing about a servant is not that he came from a certain family, or was born in a particular place. The point is that he is here now and able and ready to do his work.

I. The Herald of Christ (vv. 1-8).

The prophets had pointed forward to the coming of Christ. John the Baptist, of whom our Lord said that there was not a greater among the prophets, now appears to proclaim his presence and prepare the way for him. Of him Joseph Parker beautifully says that he "was all but a transparent veil: they could almost see the coming God through him. . . . If he stood aside for a moment there was the One who was to come."

John was a unique personality, admirably fitted to proclaim a stern message of repentance to a decadent age. Let us not put aside or ridicule strangely clad and unusual folk who have a word for us from God.

"Repent"—that was his message from the Lord. America needs that message today. The Christian doctrine of repentance has been set aside by some because they dislike its convicting power, and by others through theological readjustment. It needs re-affirmation.

John's greatest message, however, was the coming of the One who was to baptize not with water but with the Holy Ghost. Like every true witness he humbles himself and points to the Saviour. We need the message, "repent," but we need even more to recall to our preaching and our churches the Holy Ghost power of the Son of God.

II. The Baptism of Christ (vv. 9-11).

The account in Mark is brief but it brings before us the fact that the sinless Son of God thus identified his holy self with sinful humanity which he had come to save.

Let us learn the lesson that obedience to the divine will, a willingness to humble ourselves to do the work whereunto God has sent us, are prerequisites to the filling of the Holy Spirit with power and grace for life and service.

III. The Temptation of Christ (vv. 12, 13).

We recall as we consider the temptation of Jesus, that he was without sin, that there was no fallen nature in him to which Satan could appeal. The temptation or testing of Jesus was therefore along Messianic lines, but the principles both of temptation and victory are similar to those of our own experience. Consider the parallel passages in Matthew 4 and Luke 4.

The Devil has only three real temptations to present, "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life" (I John 2:16). These he used with Jesus as he tempted him to make food for his hungry body, to look at the kingdoms of this earth and attain them by a wrong method, and to presume on God's grace by throwing himself from the pinnacle of the temple.

Victory came through the use of God's Word. We need to learn that lesson and not attempt to defeat Satan with any man-made weapons of will-power, logic, or culture. Jesus was certain of victory. He is our victory. Learn to know him as Saviour and Lord. Study God's Word and learn how to use it in spiritual conflict. Yield to the Holy Spirit. Victory lies that way, and nowhere else.

The Countenance

The countenance may be defined as the title-page which heralds the contents of the human volume, but like other title-pages, it sometimes puzzles, often misleads, and often says nothing to the purpose.—W. Matthews.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Make Luncheon Sets of Striped Material.

THE napkins and mats are fringed and then whipped to keep them from raveling and to strengthen the edge. This is a very quick and easy finish to use for linens of the coarser weaves and is in harmony with peasant dishes and provincial furniture.

In cutting the material for the mats and napkins it is best to pull a thread to guide you so that the edges will be perfectly straight and fringe easily. Cut right along the little opening made in the material by drawing the thread as shown at A. Plan the size of the mats and napkins so that the material will cut to good advantage and the stripes will arrange themselves in a pleasing way through the center of each piece. Napkins for this purpose may be as small as nine inches square though many people like them a little larger than this. The mats are usually about eleven by eighteen inches.

Pull out the threads to make the fringe at the edge as I have shown here at B. From a half to three-quarters of an inch is a good depth for the fringe. Save the threads you pull out and use them for whipping the edge as I have shown here at C.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

The Threat of Foreign "Isms"
By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

In many of the messages of encour- age- ment issued with the New Year, appeared a recurrent note of serious concern.

It warned of the dark threat that the ambitions of Fascist nations abroad have brought to the peace and the welfare of humanity.

By Americans, as well as by the people of every democratic nation on earth, that warning should be heeded. For the ultimate victim of these foreign philosophies of government—whether Fascism or Nazism or Communism—is always the average man and citizen.

Current history proves it.

War rages hideously today where such nations prevail, while the great democracies are at peace.

Standards of living are lower today among the people of the dictator nations than in the democracies.

Freedom of religion, of the press, and of speech; the advancement of science and of education—all suffer under dictatorships. In democracies they flourish.

That is because the democratic ideal —to which America has been dedicated since her birth as a nation—is the freedom, the well-being, the advance- ment of every citizen. In the dictator nations, the individual becomes a robot, to serve as cannon fodder in war, as a "producing unit" in peace, for the benefit, not of himself or of humanity, but of the men in power.

Under such conditions freedom, as we know it in America, cannot survive. Yet it was to find or win such freedom that the great majority of our ancestors migrated to and developed this nation. It was to defend it that they suffered the hardship and privations of the pioneer, the wounds and the deaths of battle.

If we fail to guard vigilantly against the threat of foreign isms—from what- ever source—we betray the ideals which are so inextricably woven into our flag, our traditions, and our very lives.

Mrs. Harry Smith Rites Held Tuesday Afternoon

THIS TOWNSHIP NAMED AFTER FATHER OF KLEMMME WOMAN

Mrs. Harry Smith Passed Away At Her Home Sunday Evening

Funeral services were held this Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Wellemeyer Funeral Home for Mrs. Harry Smith, who died at her home Sunday evening after several months of illness.

Dr. William Zabilka gave the funeral sermon and interment was made in the family lot in the Klemme Cemetery beside her husband and children.

Obituary

Catherine Ell was born Sept. 21, 1852 on a farm in Union County, Ohio, the fourth of a family of nine children born to her parents, Sebastian Ell and his wife Catherine Weidmann.

At the age of four she moved with her parents to White Rock, Illinois where they lived 14 years. Here she attended the public schools and grew to womanhood.

At the age of 18, in 1870, she migrated by wagon train with her parents and other relatives, to Hancock County, Iowa. They were among the first white settlers in Ell Township, and this township was named after her father, Sebastian Ell.

In 1872, Catherine Ell and Niss Nissen were married. To this union nine children were born, the two daughters died in infancy, one son, Hans C., died at the age of forty-five, six sons survive. After twenty-three years of married life Mr. Nissen died, and then for thirty-one years the deceased was a widow. She worked by the day and supported her family of boys as best she could.

After her sons were grown on March 24, 1926, she became the wife of Harry Smith, and lived happily in south Klemme these past twelve years.

For the past several months Mrs. Smith has been in ill health, the cause of her death was cancer of the liver, and the end came Sunday evening, January 16, 1938.

She reached the age of eighty-five years, 9 months and 26 days.

She leaves besides her husband, Harry Smith, six sons, Bash, of Nampa, Idaho; Joe, of Iowa Falls, Iowa; George, of Iowa Falls, Iowa; Will, of Washington; John, of Elmonte, California; and Charles, of Rockwell City, Iowa. Seven grandchildren. Three Great Grandchildren. One sister, Mrs. George Kluckhohn, Klemme Iowa. Two brothers, Phillip Ell, of Mason City, Iowa, and George Ell, of Belmont, Iowa; besides many other relatives and friends.

1-MINUTE SAFETY TALKS

By Don Herold

Remember Pedestrians

Nearly half of the 36,800 people killed by automobile accidents in the United States last year were pedestrians, according to figures released by The Travelers Insurance Company.

In most cases, the pedestrians asked for it.

It is seldom that automobiles come up on the sidewalk and chase pedestrians. Sometimes they do, but not often.

As a rule, a pedestrian wants it and walks out where he can get it.

He'll pit his frail, watery flesh and fragile bones against a ton or two of thundering steel and glass and flaming fire.

He'll put his life in the hands of drivers of cars coming at him at 25 to 75 miles an hour—drivers, many of whom, if he knew them personally, he wouldn't trust with ten cents worth of dog meat.

He'll walk along a country road with his back to traffic (instead of facing it as he should) and leave it to the assorted morons, nit-wits, kids, drunks and a certain percentage of careful, intelligent drivers to see that they don't bump him into kingdom come.

He won't be a sissy, so instead of waiting for traffic lights in city street he'll dart out into a mess of swift traffic and jump around among speeding cars like a fox in the middle of a pack of hounds.

He'll cross in the middle of the block (4,640 killed this way last year) He'll step out from behind parked cars without peeking (1,320). He'll cross busy intersections catty-cornered.

Of course, some pedestrians are children whose parents haven't taught them the danger of playing in streets, but most pedestrians who get killed or maimed by motor cars ask for it and—GET IT!

I'd say that it ought to be easy to eliminate 10,000 pedestrian deaths a year—if the pedestrians were interested.

Three Hundred Patrons Of Oil Company Attend Annual Meet

HANCOCK COUNTY COOPERATIVE OIL ASSOCIATION HELD ANNUAL MEETING

Over Three Hundred Patrons Attended Dinner At Garner

Three hundred patrons of the Hancock County Cooperative Oil association attended the annual meeting and noon luncheon held in the Garner opera house Monday.

A seven per cent dividend totaling $3,805 was declared and paid to stockholders and patrons. Increased sales from products amounted to 25 per cent more for 1937 than for the previous year.

Talks were given by M. McArthur, Jack Miller and Warren Smith, all of Omaha, Nebr., representatives from the Quaker Oil company, and Mr. Edison, official of the Iowa Grain Dealers' association, Fort Dodge. Chris Nelson introduced the speakers.

Milo Brown, Herman Priebe and Henry Brede are the new directors elected. Other directors holding over are Charles Grau, Fred Greimann, Carl Woiwood, Jr., E. F. Boehnke, Otto Pringnitz, Albert Barz, William J. Barz, and Emil Ollenberger. Milo Brown, president, Charles Grau, secretary, and W. J. Barz, treasurer, are the present officials.

A meeting will be held Saturday, Feb. 12, when other officers will be elected and employees hired.

COUNTY PLACES NEW MAINTAINER AND PLOW OUTFIT IN KLEMMME

A new Austin Western road maintainer and snow plow arrived in Klemme Saturday from the factory in Illinois and the new machine was put into service immediately. A factory man came to unload the machine and to instruct road patrolman Lloyd Smith in the operation.

The new maintainer is one of the latest kinds of road machinery. The various lifts as well as the steering is hydraulically operated by levers. The outfit has dual wheels front and rear and has a four-wheel drive.

A large snow plow is at present attached to the front and in addition a wing plow extends to the side so that the snow can be plowed and pushed aside all in one operation.

The outfit will be used for road work and snow clearance in the territory around Klemme.

OLD RESIDENT OF COUNTY IS CANDIDATE FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Walt Pritchard, of Garner and an old timer resident of Hancock County, is a candidate for Representative on the republican ticket.

Mr. Pritchard is widely known over the entire county. He has been both a farmer and a business man and is well acquainted with the problems of this county. For a number of years he has conducted a garage business in Garner. For a few years Mr. Pritchard and his son were in the garage business in Klemme. Another son is engaged in the garage business at Britt. Pritchard and sons is among the oldest business concerns in Garner.

Mr. Pritchard has never before asked for a public office. He seeks the nomination, not as a politician, but as an old resident of the county to work for the best interests of Hancock County.

GOODELL DEFEATED BY FAST GARNER QUINTET IN DOUBLE HEADER

A large delegation of Klemme and Goodell fans took in the double header basketball game between Goodell and Garner on the latter's court Monday night.

The Garner reserves handed Goodell their first defeat of the evening's program 22 to 16.

In the first string game the Goodell boys went on a scoring spree in the first quarter and ran up a 10 to 2 count before the Garner boys could figure things out. Garner got their heads into the game and the first quarter ended 12 to 8 with Goodell on the long end of the count.

Garner continued their scoring advantage and with their hot-shot Anderson coming in on the second quarter Garner looped in six field goals and three gift shots for a total of 16 points, while Goodell hit the ring but once and received three gift shots for a total of five points, and the half ended 24 to 17 in favor of Garner.

The second half was again all Garner's and the third quarter ended 32 to 21 in Garner's favor and the final bracket read: Garner 42, Goodell 25.

SHAMROCKS WIN OVER CRYSTAL LAKE QUINTET

Play Ragged Ball But Pile Up Big Score To Hold Conference Lead

Playing the kind of ball that makes coaches gray headed the Shamrocks rode rough shod over a small but scrappy Crystal Lake team on the local floor last Friday night, piling up a 43 to 23 count.

Starting in the early part of the game both teams began making fouls. Monson went out early in the fourth quarter for Crystal Lake and two players on each team finished the contest with three fouls apiece.

Crystal Lake started things in the scoring column in the opening minutes of play but the end of the first quarter found the Shamrocks out in front 10 to 7. The Klemme boys had a lot of trouble getting started on their passing attack and never really clicked except in the third quarter when they rang up 19 points while the Lakers were getting five.

Jorgenson led the Klemme scoring with 13 points. Trampel and Grosshuesch each got 10 and Schultdt got 9. Jilek led the Crystal Lake offensive with three field goals and five gift shots for a total of 11 points.

Wood Products Are Assigned New Jobs in the Industries

By WATSON DAVIS

New York.—Wood is just plain lumber, a building material, to most people, although they have heard that both the paper upon which newspapers are printed and rayon underthings are made from wood.

Utilization of wood has many ramifications in modern industry today. But the editors of Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering in a survey discover that wood and its products will have many more uses in industry's tomorrow.

Take the troublesome liquids that result from the sulphite pulping process, first step toward newsprint and rayon. Sulphite waste liquor contains lignin, partner to cellulose in wood. Chemists are looking for jobs for lignin, confident that eventually it will be found to be as talented chemically and industrially as cellulose. In Washington state the sulphite liquor is used instead of oil for dressing the dirt roads, stabilizing the soil and giving a hard, dust-free crust. There is also research looking towards its use as fertilizer.

Gas From Wood Waste.

In Europe wood-working plants make gas from wood waste for power purposes and automobiles are fueled by wood-producer gas, made as you ride, with 25 pounds of wood the reported equivalent of a gallon of gasoline.

Germany makes sugar—actual, sweet stuff—and alcohol from wood by two different processes, but it is concluded that this would not be done profitably in the United States.

Then it is possible to squeeze ground sawdust and mill waste into hard dense products that are stronger than the wood that nature made.

Inferior softwood lumber can be pressed into hard, dense attractive "hardwoods" and the lumber industry is looking into the commercial possibilities of this transformation.

Awake to the fact that they are not limited to the form of wood as produced by the tree, useful as that is, lumber companies are installing their own research staffs and scientists are now helping lumberjacks and millhands in one of the oldest of American industries.

Brain Wave Studies of Sleep Process

New York.—Different parts of the brain apparently go to sleep separately and to different degrees, Drs. H. Davis and P. A. Davis of Harvard Medical School and Drs. A. L. Loomis, E. N. Harvey and G. Hobart of the Loomis laboratory at Tuxedo, N. Y., have found in brain wave studies reported to the journal, Science. Their studies also suggest that clues to the cause of many mental diseases or abnormalities may be found in studies of the normal falling asleep process.

Four kinds of brain waves or electrical patterns appear during the going to sleep process, they found. First there is the state when the person is at rest but awake. Next follow different kinds of waves in the drowsy "floating" state. A second intermediate state is characterized by a still different brain wave pattern, and this merges into the fourth pattern found in real sleep.

Of practical importance, they point out, is the fact that the patterns of early sleep in normal persons are strikingly like those seen in some mentally sick or otherwise abnormal persons. Scientists making brain wave studies should not be misled by the pattern of an unsuspected dozing or "floating" state into diagnosing a state of mental abnormality.

This similarity suggests that many abnormal mental conditions may depend on general modifications of brain function which are fundamentally like those of normal sleep.

Big Trees Survived Because No High Winds Prevailed

Carmel, Calif.—Survival of "General Sherman," largest of the West Coast Big Trees in Sequoia National park and believed to be the oldest living thing, appears partially at least to be a result of long peace.

No high wind has disturbed the General and its brother Big Trees during the last 3,000 or 4,000 years in the secluded valleys where they grow, Dr. D. T. MacDougal of the Carnegie institution of Washington indicates. For if these monarchs of the forest had been exposed to such a wind, they would not be standing today. Their huge bulks are anchored on root disks that are but a few feet thick and only twice the diameter of the base of the tree.

People in Love Not Nearly So Happy as They Should Be

New York.—In love, marriage, business and other close human relations, the social machinery functions with only 25 per cent efficiency, Dr. John Levy of the Brooklyn Child Guidance Centre clinic told the Psychologists' league forum here.

Even men and women in love do not get along together as they should. The joys from human contacts are only about a third as great as they might be, due to the backward development of human emotions, Dr. Levy said.

"In varying degrees, the two people in contact have a heck of a time," he said. "They are either sitting down hard on their feelings or they are worrying, bickering, or just plain scrapping. I know no two people, married or unmarried, who come anywhere near realizing the full richness of personal relationships."

Heavy Loss to Business.

The financial loss to business from this emotional abrasiveness in the machinery of personal contacts is tremendous, Dr. Levy told his audience.

"Business tries to be 100 per cent perfect in its impersonal activities, but accepts a 25 per cent standard in its methods of handling human beings."

"Millions of dollars are spent by the automotive industry to keep its bookkeeping system up to date, but hardly a penny to understand and modernize the human machinery upon which all other aspects of its operations depend for success."

The backwardness of business in this respect is due largely to lack of understanding of the emotional satisfactions men get from their jobs, Dr. Levy believes. It is as difficult for the business executive to see his own status as "stern father" in his strict dealings with his striking employees as it is for the employees to see their protesting behavior as a resentment against an authoritative parent.

The eternal triangle is seen in a new light as a nervous disease affecting not one individual but three in their relationships to each other through the new science of "Sociometry," described to the meeting by Dr. J. L. Moreno, of Beacon, N. Y. The function of this new science is to break down gradually the misunderstandings and fears of the groups studied.

Infant Death Rate by Accident High

New York.—Two thousand infants less than a year old are killed each year in accidents, a survey reported in the statistical bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company reveals.

Mechanical suffocation—suffocation in too-heavy bedclothes or in a too-soft pillow—is responsible for the deaths of nearly two-fifths of the babies who are killed accidentally, the report declares.

The 2,000 deaths work out to 97 accidental deaths for every 100,000 babies born alive in the United States. Canada reports also a high rate although their rate is comparatively lower, 76 per 100,000. High accidental death rates among negro babies act to boost the total for the United States as a whole.

The high accidental death rate for infants has been overlooked in the past because of the higher mortality from disease, the report points out.

"Accidents to infants should be a matter of national concern," it is argued, "for every year more than 2,000 babies are killed in accidents of one kind or another—more than die in an average year from measles, scarlet fever and diphtheria combined."

Other accidents involving infants include suffocation from swallowing foreign objects such as safety pins; burns and scalds; falls from cribs; and poisonous substances and fire.

No significant improvement in this rate has been recorded during the past 15 years, the survey concludes.

Synthetic Perfume Is Cheap and Good

Rochester, N. Y.—The synthetic perfumes of modern ten-cent stores excel those for which perilous sea voyages and hazardous caravans probed the Orient in the Middle Ages, Dr. Charles F. H. Allen of the Eastman Kodak company declared at a meeting of the American Chemical society here.

America's beauty bill, he added, annually runs to over $200,000,000 even when a most conservative estimate is taken. Much of this is profit; for, said the scientist, the jar containing the cosmetic may well be the most expensive part. For example: Jar—six cents; contents—two cents.

Synthetic perfumes duplicate natural perfumes in everything but cost. Natural oil of rose costs $175 a pound while the same product, made in the laboratory, costs only $22.50 a pound.

Ship Reaches Its Last Port of Call

The freighter Ohioan, which went aground many months ago off Lands End near San Francisco, Calif., is shown above after it was broken in two during one of the worst storms off the California coast in many years. Because of the precarious position in which the ship was left, it was impossible for salvaging vessels to approach close enough or for tugs to help float the vessel.

Sermonless Church

The Chapel of the Ascension, near the Marble Arch in London, is believed to be the only Christian church that is used exclusively for meditation and prayer. All day long every day of the year, morning until dusk, no sermons are ever preached and no hymns are sung within its walls. The chapel is open daily.

Beware Coughs from common colds That Hang On

No matter how many medicines you have tried for your cough, cold, or bronchial irritation, you get relief now with Creomulsion. Serious trouble may be brewing you cannot afford to take a chance with any remedy less potent. Creomulsion, which goes right to the seat of the trouble and aids in the mucous membranes and to loosen and expel the germ-laden phlegm. Even if other remedies have failed, don't be discouraged, try Creomulsion. Your druggist is authorized to refund your money if you are not thoroughly satisfied with the results obtained from the very first bottle. Creomulsion is one word—two, and it has no hyphen. Ask for it plainly, see that the name on the bottle is Creomulsion, you'll get the genuine product, the relief you want. (Adv.)

Tired of Croquet? Try Kendo Fencing!

ALL you need is a broomstick, a catcher's mask, a sadistic impulse and a bathrobe. Then you're all set for the gentle pastime of Kendo fencing, as taught by Prof. T. Mori (1), champion of Japan.

Kendo fencing teaches Japanese youth the arts of self-control, poise and self-defense. Ceremonial robes must be worn throughout a match, and traditions such as bowing, manner of holding the "sword," spoken greetings etc., must be strictly adhered to. Participants fence in bare feet, wear rugged headgear, breastplate and gloves, but there are many exposed parts of the body that come in for some pretty hard blows during the encounter. Plenty of bruised shoulders here!

Try it on surly neighbors or over-persistent bill collectors. Invite your rival for your girl's hand to try a round or two of Kendo fencing. At least it'll be good for a laugh. In fact, it'll practically slay you!

Picture Parade

Even his own mother wouldn't recognize a Kendo fencer, once he is all dolled up for the fray. No chances must be taken in seeing that the headgear is laced up tightly (2). A slip of the mask at just the right (or wrong) moment might result in a beautiful cauliflower ear or a bashed-in nose. Broomsticks can be pretty dangerous weapons in the wrong hands!

The bout is on! (3) The guys waving the bamboo shilleghs are two of the best in this country, Y. Nakamura (left) and M. Yokoi. They have to call their shots, giving each other a chance to cover up.

"Touche!" as the Japanese probably don't put it. (4) It takes three blows in succession to win a bout.

And when a bout is over (5) the boys bow to each other, not being able to kiss and make up with those bird cages they're wearing. This is Japanese diplomacy de luxe, and each of the contestants is probably able to explain which one is the aggressor.

"Swarty's" Story

Washington.—His name will mean little to anyone except the rather wide circle of friends and business associates who admire his courage and thrift. Since there are hundreds of thousands like him in this country, I will identify him by his nickname—"Swarty." I have known him some ten or eleven years as a friend and a neighbor, a fellow who could be properly called the salt of the earth. Swarty's story is most interesting because it illustrates a condition.

He was the son of a country doctor. In his early twenties, he became a traveling salesman. His personality and his ability carried above the ranks of the average order-taker. He saved his money. He and his wife inherited a few thousand dollars each from their respective fathers. Swarty went into business for himself here in Washington. The business prospered to the extent that Swarty had built up a backlog of savings as a reserve and had bought his own home, a modest place. They are a happy little family and in that as well they are like hundreds of thousands of others in this country.

There came the depression of seven years ago. Sales by Swarty's little plant declined. He kept his ten employees on the rolls, however, as long as he could. The drain became too much and he had to reduce the payroll; indeed, he had to draw on the backlog. After nearly five years, things began to pick up. He started again to restore the reserve so that there could be something on which to draw again if business was slack. But almost simultaneously, Swarty found a lot of new taxes coming in the front door. One of them was the ridiculous levy that said in effect that he could not build up that backlog again because if he did he would have to share the excess with the federal government.

There had been some other taxes before that one, but it was the most disastrous in its effect. There were other taxes after the surplus earnings tax, too, until lately he told me that he was paying nine different taxes each month, and each year he has to pay an income tax on the salary that he allows himself for managing the business and, besides all of these, he has the strictly local taxes of the District of Columbia. Among these, of course, is a tax on the little home that he owns; a business privilege tax which assesses him a certain percentage of his total receipts; a license tax for the privilege of doing business; a tax on his motor cars which he uses in his business, a tax on the gasoline which powers the cars, and a few other odds and ends.

I made no mention in the above paragraph that he, like you and I, pays several hundred taxes that are not called taxes. He smokes cigarettes, for example, and the federal tax is six cents a pack. (Many states have a state tax in addition.) He bought his wife a piece of jewelry for Christmas, and there were three different federal taxes hidden in the price he paid.

Matter of Taxes

I could go on and on with a revelation of the taxes, but I mention them only incidentally. The taxes that I am concerned with in this story of his affairs are the taxes directly on his business. They are important for the reason that he told me the other night that if it were not for all of these taxes, he could re-employ several men whom he had to discharge when the business was at its lowest. He can not hire them now, however, because the margin of profit available to him is small. He has to accomplish as much with six men as he used to with eight or nine or ten in order to make a living out of the business for himself and his family.

Swarty recounted the details of his own business to me about the time that the great Westinghouse corporation of Pittsburgh made public its tax story. In substance and in brief, Westinghouse pointed out that its tax obligations had increased from around two million dollars eight years ago to something over sixteen million dollars in federal payments in the last year. In the years 1935, 1936 and 1937, the taxes paid by Westinghouse were held to have been sufficient to have maintained about 6,500 additional workers on the payroll.

I know that someone will retort that a great corporation like Westinghouse ought to pay big taxes. There can be no doubting the truth of that assertion. But there is a much graver condition shown by exposition of the tax affairs of the big business of Westinghouse, and Swarty's little business.

The only difference between the problems of the two is that Swarty, being a "little fellow," is not slapped and cuffed and called crooked by the demagogues. Swarty's government is doing to him, however, exactly what is being done to Westinghouse by the same authority.

Thus, I believe it is fair to conclude that these two cases illustrate beyond possible refutation how government has become topheavy, how its machinery has grown to a point almost beyond comprehension. These two cases, among tens and tens of thousands, show what the ship of state is costing. Indeed, I feel more and more that if we have a ship of state, it is leaking so badly that half of the taxes collected flow into the ocean of ineffectiveness and economic waste. The condition obtains from the smallest unit of township administration to the doors of congress and the White House in Washington.

Congress Is Back

We are into a new session of congress this week, the regular annual session. The extra session that met November 15 amid a great deal of ballyhoo as to what it would accomplish has gone into history. It left a record of which no one can be proud. But that's gone by and the new session is starting with a fine field waiting for cultivation—except that 435 members of the house and some 30-odd senators face primaries and elections. That fact alone provides the answer to many things you will see unfolded in the next four or five or six months. The boys will play politics aplenty.

But before we go into that, let us examine the little game of politics which President Roosevelt has initiated. I think it cannot be gained that the President has tossed a very hot potato into the lap of congress. Some time ago, it will be recalled, the President said with emphasis that the budget must be balanced this year—that spending of government money must not exceed the income as it has done now consistently for seven years. There was much applause of that pronouncement at the capitol. It seems, however, they are laughing out of the other side of their mouth now because suddenly the politicians discovered that if the budget were brought into balance, great gobs of political pap, patronage and projects would have to be eliminated.

There was a reaction to the President's statement. Mr. Roosevelt very promptly said, in effect, "Well, boys, if we cut down spending we have to start somewhere. How about cutting off a couple of hundred millions from the federal contribution for road building," and a howl went up to the skies. Quit building roads, never! So the President tried again. Lately, he has sent a letter to Representative Cartwright, Oklahoma Democrat, saying that if Mr. Cartwright did not want his committee to act on the road fund curtailment, congress and its individual members would have to take the responsibility when the budget shows up out of balance.

I suppose there could be a slowing down in road building, but members of the house tell me there are hundreds of other places where spending could be reduced without harming a permanent national policy. There will be much hauling and filling but if congress really wants to curb spending, let it give a few minutes look at the things discovered by Senator Harry Byrd, the Virginia Democrat, and his investigating committee. That committee brought forth information, I am informed, as to how half a billion dollars of New Deal experiments could be eliminated and our United States would never miss a single one of them. (I do not mean the patronage boys on the payrolls. Of course, they would miss their soft jobs.)

To get back to the hot potato, however, the President has told congress in effect to sort out the things it would kill and pass the legislation that would eliminate the spending and bring a balanced budget. By so doing, he has dodged all of the backlash from local politicians of his own machine and has made the representatives and senators the goats in front of their own people.

Blight Over Greenbelt

I must not fail to report to you about the plight of the citizens of Greenbelt, that model community erected by the distinguished re-moulder of men, Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, where cheap rents were to prevail and economic royalists dare not tread. For $14,000,000, Professor Tugwell built apartments for 185 families, provided no family had more than two babies. The government is going to get its money back in 232 years.

But a great blight has fallen over Greenbelt. The tenants did not read the fine print of their leases. Too late, they learned that the fine print prohibited them from having dogs, or any kind of pets. I understand there has been a bit of boot-legging of pets but anyway there is a prohibition against such things.

Now, however, a great movement is under way in Greenbelt. Petitions are in circulation demanding that Landlord Uncle Sam change the lease. One never knows where such things will lead.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Making a Chintz Bed Spread With Corded Seams.

WOULD you like to make a chintz bedspread to match your curtains? Of course, such a spread must have seams in it, for most chintzes are only 36 inches wide, while the average double bed is about 54 inches wide. But seams need not detract from the beauty of the spread.

Eleven and a half yards of 36-inch-wide chintz will make this spread and pillow cover for a double bed. In the diagrams at the right I have given the dimensions for cutting these for a 54-inch-wide bed. It is best to cut the center portions first; then cut the 18-inch side sections for the pillow cover; then the 10-inch strips for pillow cover and spread. This leaves a long 26-inch-wide strip for the side ruffles of the spread.

Cable cord for the corded seams may be purchased at notion counters. Prepared bias trimming may be used for the cord covering. Baste the covering over the cord, as shown here at A; then place the covered cord in the seam, as shown, and stitch as at B, using the cording foot of your machine.

REPORT OF R. L. MCMILLIN, COUNTY TREASURER FOR 1937

Tax collections for the year were above average for Hancock County. The total amount of tax levied in the County was $605,917.-59, of which we collected $600,895.-13, or 99.17 per cent of the total. Delinquent tax collected for the year amounted to $15,996.98 and Drainage collections were $26,837.-35.

Poor fund, $31,983.48; County schools, from current tax for 1937, $264,931.36; Road construction, paid into County from gasoline tax from the State, $58,701.18; Amount paid to state for primary road. Received from automobile licenses, $76,452.00; Amount paid to the State General Fund from use tax collections from new automobiles registered since April 1937, $5,880.-37; Amount credited to County fund for registration of automobiles, $2,615.50.

The total indebtedness of Hancock County outside of Primary Road Bonds amounts to $2,400.00, which amount was credited to the Poor Fund. This fund at the present shows a fair balance.

The Value Of Chiropractic

Chiropractic adjustments will release the vital nerve forces that are required to keep your resistance up. The competent chiropractor is carefully trained to locate the place of nerve interference in your spine, and to release such interference by adjusting the vertebral subluxation that is causing pressure on nerves. Chiropractic adjustments are very beneficial in cases of colds, influenza, pneumonia, neuritis, rheumatism of any form, and all other body ailments. Radiant Heat Baths followed by Swedish massage for relief of rheumatism. Colonic Therapy, a bowel treatment for gastritis, chronic constipation and colitis. Short-Wave-Diathermy; the latest instrument in physiotherapy used in treatment of any specific part. Ultra Violet and Infra-red light treatment. Radioc for diagnosis and treatment. My office is one of the best equipped chiropractic offices in the state. I will be glad to show any one through my office and explain the different methods of treatment at any time.

Pumping Water for Irrigation in Inner China.

Four Great Chinese Cities On the Yangtze and Han Rivers

Prepared by National Geographic Society,
Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

OF THE four Chinese cities to which the government of the republic moved due to the pressure of the Sino-Japanese conflict, Hankow stands out as the city of most importance. Because of its excellent communications with Canton and Hong Kong, many of the important government activities were moved to this inland port.

Hankow lies about 600 miles up the Yangtze. The city proper sprawls over a wide area of the north bank of the river where the Han pours its muddy torrent. Across the Han lies Hanyang, and across the mile-wide Yangtze, Wuchang. The latter city is older than Hankow for it was flourishing when Hankow was a mere fishing hamlet. Both Hanyang and Wuchang are now a part of "Greater Hankow" with more than a million and a half inhabitants.

Hankow's harbor seethes with activity. Ungainly junks move about the water manned by expert rivermen nearly as easily as modern giants of the sea in our busy seaports. They range from craft with rotten hulks and gaping holes above the water line to huge high-pooped craft, adorned with brightly painted carvings and plates that make them look like floating circus wagons.

Small matting-covered sampans dart here and there by the muscle-power of perspiring coolies whose families fill the air along the shore with the singsong chatter of the Orient. It is estimated that 25,000 native boats ply in and out of Hankow and its sister cities. Meanwhile modern steamboats from lower Yangtze points come and go on schedule.

The Hankow Bund Looks Occidental.

The Hankow Bund, stretching along the Yangtze for two miles, is disconcerting to the traveler seeking purely Chinese panoramas. Trees shade the wide boulevard while the landward side is flanked by modern banks and business buildings that are not unlike those of New York, London, Paris and Berlin.

Beyond the Bund, upstream, the roofs of concrete warehouses form a portion of the city's skyline. Here hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of cotton, silk, tea, wood oil, beans and many other products of a vast area of China served by the Yangtze and Han usually are stored, awaiting shipment.

Beyond the warehouses begin the foreign concessions. The British concession, oldest of all, was established in 1861 when Hankow was opened to foreign trade. Then, in order, came the Russian, the French and the old German concessions, each marked by wide streets and modern residences and shops. There are several electric light and power stations in the city.

A native city in the background also seethes with commercial activity to the tune of noises that strain the visitor's eardrums. Some of the narrow lanes are paved with flagstone while others are mere ruts. Nevertheless, they are the playgrounds of thousands of children, and the busy streets of a city which has been called the "Hub of the Universe."

To the foreigner, the pedestrians in their loose-fitting clothing resemble pajama-clad citizens on parade, but the wearers are by no means ready to retire. Business in Hankow is almost a religion, and nearly every man seen on the street has to do with the enormous amount of commerce that flows through and past the port.

If a traveler knows the advertising code in Hankow, he can locate any type of business by reading the shapes and colors of the shop signs which project over the narrow thoroughfares. For instance, gold placers use salmon-colored boards with green Chinese characters. Druggists' boards are gilded. Black, gold, red, and green are the predominating colors. On each sign is a motto and when a store changes hands, the sign is valued somewhat the same as American "good will."

Important governmental departments also were moved to Changsha and Chungking.

Fireworks of Changsha.

Changsha is a city of fireworks, literally and figuratively. The Fourth of July firecrackers used by the American small boy before the "Safe and Sane Fourth" was so widely enforced were imported heavily from Changsha.

It is the capital of the hilly province of Hunan, important because it contains enormous coal fields, many unworked, and because in it, to the north of Changsha, is the huge lake, Tung-tung hu, which acts as a reservoir for the Yangtze floods.

Among Changsha's most interesting sights are the wheelbarrows that climb stairs. Some distance ahead of the regulation wheel there is another smaller one. In climbing over flagstone steps or bridges, the handles of the wheelbarrow are lowered until the auxiliary wheel rises above the next higher step. Then the wheelbarrow, which often carries 300 or 400 pounds, sees-saws from wheel to wheel until the next level stretch of the flagstones is attained.

Changsha is closely linked with New Haven, Conn., for there is, just outside the rapidly disappearing wall, in which the inhabitants once took great pride, one of the best known mission schools in China, which is Yale's contribution to the education of the Chinese.

A large part of Hunan is an unworked field of anthracite and bituminous coal and at Pinghsiang, which is connected with Changsha by railroad, there is one of the mines which furnishes fuel for the great iron works at Hanyang.

With about 500,000 inhabitants, Changsha rules a province of 22 million and is one of the cleanest cities in China. Many of the streets are long and straight and at one time the city itself was divided between two magistracies. The bazaars are full of life and interest, some of the candies being famous for miles around.

Chungking a Busy Port.

Chungking is a busy river port lying about 1,500 miles upstream from the mouth of the Yangtze river. It is the chief port and point of entry for the rich province of Szechwan, said to contain the natural resource of an empire.

The far-reaching trade of Szechwan is conducted entirely by river craft from Chungking, whose population of half a million is crowded into a small triangle formed by the junction of the Kialing river with the Yangtze.

Fields at the back of the city, making the third side of the triangle, have gradually become entirely filled with graves of countless generations. This has resulted in hopelessly enclosing the great port of Chungking upon its rocky promontory between the two rivers, and making its expansion impossible, ancestral graves having heretofore been considered inviolable.

Through the centuries the city has increased in population, but without expansion of territory, until overcrowding has almost passed belief. The city being built on a rock, there is no possibility of proper drainage so that Chungking ranks high in odors, even among Chinese communities.

Many Valuable Exports.

However, enormous wealth is hidden away behind Chungking's rather dismal exterior. The products of an empire have passed through her gates for centuries, rare and valuable goods destined for the markets of the world. These include some of the most sought-after products of modern commerce, so valuable as to be worth transporting 1,500 miles to the mouth of the Yangtze and thence half round the earth. Among Chungking's exports are musk from the glands of Tibetan antelopes, widely used in perfume making, and wood oil, pressed from the seeds of the fruit of a tree, valuable in the manufacture of varnish. Chungking's hog bristles are famous among brush manufacturers the world over and she exports an insect wax used in the preparation of medicines.

Lesson for January 16

BEGINNING A LIFE OF SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:14-28
GOLDEN TEXT—The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel.—Mark 1:15
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus' First Helpers
JUNIOR TOPIC—Why the Fishermen Followed Jesus
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving Now
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Adjusting Life to Service

The public ministry of our Lord was not begun with any great fanfare of publicity. Leaving Judea where the entrenched forces of formal religion had joined the forces of sin and degradation in opposition to him, and which had brought about the imprisonment of John, our Lord appears in his home country, Galilee.

I. Preaching the Gospel (vv. 14, 15, 21, 22).

His first activity is worthy of careful note, for it is not exactly what one might expect in this Gospel of Mark, which we have already characterized as the Gospel of mighty deeds rather than of words. Jesus came to work miracles, and he did work them, and continues to do the miraculous even in our day. It is therefore significant that his first recorded work was that of preaching, his second that of calling and preparing fellow workers, and last of all the miraculous healing of the demoniac.

From a human viewpoint one would think that the opposite order would prevail. First let the Master do some mighty miracle to catch the attention of the people, then organize a great "party," and then preach. Much of the so-called evangelistic effort in our day follows that human formula and fails of lasting results. Observe the man who magnifies preaching and gives the Word of God pre-eminence, and you will see real spiritual accomplishments.

Jesus preached faith and repentance, or perhaps one should say repentance and faith (v. 15). They go together in our Lord's preaching. Let us follow his example.

We read in verse 2 that the hearers were astonished because he spoke with authority. They had been accustomed to hearing the lawyers dispute on the basis of the authority of the law, now the lawgiver himself stood in their midst. He did not set aside the law, but he gave it an interpretation and direction which surprised them.

II. Calling Disciples (vv. 16-20).

The orderly development of any work calls for the choosing and training of associates. Moody is said to have observed that "it is a greater thing to put ten men to work than it is to do ten men's work." Our Lord was no mere human leader, but he desired and used fellow-workers and he committed to them the carrying on of his work after he departed.

God still calls men into his service. Would that grace might be given to each one to whom such a call may come to respond "straightway," as did the disciples. The writer has just read the letter of a heart-broken man who has refused to answer God's call for four long years, and now comes with a broken body which may hinder his usefulness for life. Such tragedies may be averted by prompt and willing obedience.

III. Healing the Demoniac (vv. 23-28).

Three things stand out in this story. The first is that the Son of God has power over the demons of Satan. Any effort to "fight the Devil" in our own power is foredoomed to failure. But in the name of Jesus Christ we may bid him depart from us. Thank God, it works!

The other thought is also of vital import. The demons recognized Jesus, they knew that he was "the Holy One of God" (v. 24), and they bore public testimony of that fact. And yet they were demons, the enemies of God. Saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is more than a knowledge of his claims, a pious repetition of his name even though it be done in public. Let us make sure that we have a living faith in the Son of God.

Our final observation is that our Lord did not permit the demons to testify concerning him. Christ and his church do not need the flattering words or the financial support of unbelievers. Every time we accept them we weaken our testimony and make ourselves ridiculous before the world. If unbelievers think well of Christ let them show their sincerity by seeking him as Saviour and Lord. Then both they and their gifts will be acceptable and to his glory.

Physical Handicaps

The failure to overcome our physical handicaps is only one of many indications that few of us ever discover ourselves.

Seeing Ourselves

We see time's furrows on another's brow; how few themselves, in that just mirror, see!—Young.

Pleasures

A man that knows how to mix pleasures with business, is never entirely possessed by them.

All-White Wrap Is Chic This Winter

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HERE'S telling you how to look your most enchanting self when you go to dining, dancing and making merry during the winter social swirl. Told in fashion's own language the message is to wear flattering white—your gown, your wrap, your corsage, all-white. White flower head-dress, too!

The ingenue's choice is for full-skirt romantic entrancing creations made of frosty, frothy diaphanous whites that dazzle with glittering, glistening sequin, crystal and rhinestone accents. If you happen to be of the stately, statuesque type rather than the airy-fairy sort you'll be voted the belle of the ball clad in a glove-fitting skilfully draped low decollete gown made of heavy white crepe which makes trimming conspicuous by its utter absence save for a chaste corsage of waxen-white camelias or gardenias or white orchids if you will have it so.

White wraps to wear over these beguiling frocks are so smartly in fashion they are literally taking the world by storm this season. They may be of cloth or velvet (often luxuriously furred with white fox) to ensemble with the gowns they top or they may be of snowy fur, preferably ermine, for ermine is notably in the lead whether it be for jacket, medium-length coat or floor-length wrap, or bolero fantasies.

Then, too, there is the new-this-season erminecrush that makes up exquisitely into wraps such as pictured herewith. An ensemble of coat and muff made of snowy erminecrush as shown is adorable for the girl who is invited to parties galore. Under it the young lady wears one of the new tulle frocks with voluminous skirt and expertly fitted bodice that is so quaint and so chic all in one.

Yes indeed, this winsome muff and wrap set is one any stylish-minded woman would love to own. Well, why not even if you happen to be one among those to whom evening elegance at little cost is a problem to be met. Listen close, while we whisper a secret idea we feel the urge to pass on to you. If you needs must keep within a limited budget why not buy a few yards of white erminecrush and "make your own" little cushion muff and swank coat?

We might say that if you would be intrigued with the thought of a little bolero, muff and hat set, patterns are easily available and such a trio made of erminecrush would carry you through a winter with unmistakable style distinction and allure.

An all-white cape is also a possession to be coveted. See the one in the picture. The lavishness of the velvety weave has been added unto by the trim of sable-dyed kolinsky. You would not necessarily have to keep your white cape or coat for formal for the beauty about erminecrush is it is really quite practical. Cruising in tropical waters or vacationing up North, attending opera and making the rounds of teas and musicales, it is an ideal choice because it can be packed without fear of wrinkling since erminecrush naturally has a soft snowy white deeply crushed pile.

HIGH-STYLE SUEDE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

If you are properly style-minded you will set your heart on having a suit tailored of richly colorful suede. The handsome suede suits that feature so conspicuously in the present fashion picture are ideal for rain or shine as they are made of a shelter suede that is shower-proof and winterproof. The jacket has padded shoulders with a military air. For longer steps midlady has only to unbutton the bottom leather covered button that fastens the front opening.

BLACK IS FAVORED FOR DAYTIME WEAR

Black worn with white and light colors is Bruyere's choice for smart daytime clothes in the mid-season collection. Light wool costumes in black with white satin boures are a highlight of the showing, and rhinestone clips are the leading trim.

A black two-piece daytime ensemble is made in lightweight wool with straight-cut skirt and waist-length jacket of bloused design, fitted to a snug wide belt. With the costume is worn a lustrous white satin blouse, with long, fitted sleeves. The bodice is draped from center of the waistline, where it is fastened with a wine grosgrain ribbon which forms a corset belt, dropped lower at the back. The suit jacket, opened to the waistline, is trimmed with a pair of rhinestone clips at the neck.

Sumptuously Furred Tweed

Suits Are High in Favor
An increasing interest in suits made of striking tweed is noted. These are not just tweed in the ordinary sense of the word, but they are sumptuous affairs of gorgeous tweed that "gets you" because of the grand and glorious coloring and the fascinating nubby knotty textures. The opulent furs that trim these elegant suits are a fitting tribute to the tweed itself. These colorful tweed outfits give an excellent opportunity to vary the all-black vogue that has persisted for so long a time.

Covert Slacks.

Wool covert cloth, long a favorite for topcoats, is being used for slacks by well-dressed undergrads at several leading Eastern universities.

Accent Your Dress

Large rectangular and triangular clips of rhinestones, baguettes or jewel-tone sets are seen at high necklines of dark afternoon frocks.

Uncle Phil Says:

Would Reverse Order
Young folks don't have any reasons for falling in love, getting married, but when they want to be divorced the quires very definite ones.

A man who is sure of himself doesn't have to "impress" As a rule he doesn't care.

Time is money only if you know how to turn it into money.

By VIRGINIA VALE

EACH year the Paramount company can be counted on to present a thrilling panorama of American history in the making, and this year they offer "Wells Fargo," which in many ways tops all previous efforts, even last year's "Plainsman," for sheer excitement.

The adventure, heroism and romance of developing coast to coast transportation has the breathless sweep of fiction, doubly stirring because we know it is based on fact. Joel McCrae and Frances Dee are the principals in the interwoven romance, and Bob Burns steps out of character to play a stalwart of the early West. Better send the children early to see this one, they will want to stay all day, and they'll learn a lot of American history in a painless and entertaining fashion.

Greta Garbo stole quietly away in Hollywood without even saying good-by to her closest friends, sailed away to Sweden to stay indefinitely. Her contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer calls for one more picture, and it is likely she will make that one in Finland.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer want Trudy Bradley, narrator on the CBS "Evening hour from Chicago," to go into motion pictures, but Bradley is reluctant to take a chance so they have arranged what probably the most comprehensive series of tests ever given a performer. For one whole month Bradley will make daily film tests in New York, flying back to Chicago daily for his Sunday evening stint.

A new combination of talent is put over the "On Broadway" program heard over NBC. Don Johnson, known to radio listeners as the Professor Figgis bottle, is writing the program and the leading part is Alice Frost of the "Big Dick" cast.

Udric March and his wife, Gwene Eldridge, are running into such excitement on their stage that they are half tempted to write a scenario around their adventures. Recently, the company became franchised one of the leading actors, one ill just before a performance. That persuasive Freddie March, who really should have been a salesman, talked Kay Johnson into playing in the role of a brief rehearsal. Miss Johnson was traveling with the company to be near her husband, John Gwene, who directed the play as part of vacation from directing spectacular pictures like "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Someone in Hollywood will tell you that a motion-picture star is lucky if he can hold on to his popularity for a few years. One of the exceptions is Richard Dix, who just signed one of the biggest contracts of his life, after fifteen years of interrupted popularity. R.K.O. plan to make a big West-Indian spectacle, something on the order of "The Sign of the Cross," his success. Like Jack Holt, Dix, a veteran, he gets better with age.

Elmer Merman could have signed a motion-picture contract any time in the past four years, but the blues singer preferred to just one picture every year or then rush off to New York to get about it. In "Happy Trails," however, she is so well photographed and her voice so beautifully recorded that she has succeeded to Twentieth Century-Fox engagements and will make pictures regularly for them from now on, whose perfect phrasing made her many a composer's singer, thus adds one more to an inspiring career. She is a stenographer, and a speedy typist, used to get occasional engagements tosing at parties. Taking a rest, she went into a small club at very low salary and a few weeks had a contract with Warner shorts.

AND ENDS—Sonja Henie has a service carnival company that will travel to several cities while she waits for the scenario of her next picture to be written. Jessica Dragonette is being offered a picture offers again. Fred Allen's script, "The Great Dictator," is being offered to himself. His writing is micro-phonized. Maureen O'Sullivan hurried to England to play with Norma Macintosh in "Marie Antoinette."

I. O. meeting.

New York World's Fair in Preview

Artists' conception of the middle sector of the central mall of the New York World's fair of 1939, showing a 2,000-foot esplanade arranged alongside five lagoons. The lagoons will form setting for a group of four sculptured figures symbolizing basic factors in American liberty, for huge exhibit buildings and other exposition features.

NOVEL WORM CATCHER

Dr. Carl Omeron, left, of Los Angeles, Calif., demonstrates his "vibro-helmintholator," a worm-catching device he recently invented, to his friend, Don Wilson. It consists of a steel rod and a corrugated wooden stick. When he puts the rod in soggy earth near a tree or pole and draws the stick across the rod like a violinist drawing a bow, the worms come out attracted by the vibrations.

GAVE EYE TO BOY

John Wesley Amos, sixty years old, of St. Joseph, La., who gave his left eye to Frank Chabina, nineteen years old, in a rare operation recently, that he might save the lad's failing sight. Amos and Chabina became friendly in a hospital in New Orleans where they were patients.

"Move Over!" Says Dam Builder to River

Shifting around America's second-largest river is one of the most difficult problems connected with construction of the Grand Coulee dam on the Columbia river in Washington, which on completion will be the largest masonry construction in the world. Picture shows gigantic bulkheads which close off slots in the west section of the dam, forcing the river to move over and flow through similar passageways left in the central section.

Three Little Words

NEXT time you or yours want "something nice to wear," remember me and my three little words: Sew-Your-Own! Yes, Milady, sew-your-own because it pays big dividends. It's good for you! Instead of worrying about clothes you can't have, you'll be humming about all the pretty things you can have—and all because you sew, Sew-Your-Own! Won't you join us today or very soon?

White House or Cottage.

Even if your home were the White House, Milady, you would need a little frock like today's 1413 to see you through your housekeeping chores. It has that style usually reserved for expensive frocks and its simplicity will fascinate you. A young collar tops its shirtwaist styling, while the trim short sleeves and shirred yoke are features to be appreciated every time you put it on. It will make you smart in crisp new gingham, and it's more than chic in silk crepe. Try it both ways—you'll like them!

So Simple, So Sweet.

Little Miss Two-to-Eight will use her very nicest three-syllable words to exclaim over this frock (above center) designed especially for her by Sew-Your-Own! It is one of those so-simple, so-sweet little affairs that every mother and every daughter has a weakness for. The new prints or criss-cross gingham will look more than appealing on your little "forty pounds of charm," especially if the trimming is of gay red ribbon to match the bows in her hair.

That Poured-in Look.

"Something nice to wear," in the full sense of the phrase, is the brand new frock at the right. Your teas and bridge will be dates to look forward to with this smart model in black satin or velvet, awaiting your call. Fashion says: "that poured-in look," and Sew-Your-Own said "when" just in the nick to make this your most figure-flattering frock. It is equally effective for the sub-deb and young executive. It belongs in every well-groomed lady's wardrobe. Why not in yours?

The Patterns.

Pattern 1413 is designed for sizes 34 to 50. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 35 or 39-inch material.

Pattern 1852 is designed for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8 years. Size 4 requires 2½ yards of 39-inch material plus 6 yards of ribbon for trimming, and 1 yard for belt.

Pattern 1383 is designed for sizes 14 to 20. Size 16 requires 2½ yards of 54-inch material.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

FIRE..

Will Strike 400 Homes Tonight

...400 homes burn every night...and 400 more every throughout the year. That is the grim toll of fire in this city. We hope you will never join THIS 400.

But suppose fire did visit your home—would you be prepared? Would you be able to replace everything that was destroyed out loss or delay?

You probably carry fire insurance. But ordinary fire insurance does not cover private papers. It does not cover sentimental things. Such things as deeds, securities, photographs and other valuable papers are kept in your home at your own risk.

This is a needless chance to take. For a very moderate charge you can rent a Safe Deposit Box in our vaults and give your most precious year-round protection. Come in and see the modern safe boxes we provide for our valuable personal property.

A National Objective

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Today in America both government and business enterprise are seeking a common objective.

It is to quicken to their accustomed pace the productive forces of the nation—and thus increase employment possibilities and the general well-being of all our people.

There have been recent indications that various leaders, both in and out of public office, realize the great need of working together toward this common end. All Americans concerned with the progress and prosperity of our people will hope that these efforts prove successful.

For, as the American people know, sound production—with its increased employment—always brings added production.

When wages are spent for food, for clothing and for the homes and recreational facilities of the average worker they create a demand for the products of the farm, the mine and the factory which requires still more employment to fulfill.

When wages decrease because production has been discouraged, that demand lags, and with it lag the employment and general prosperity that it formerly created.

No program of relief or other aid, however administered, can fill the place of sound production as a method of creating new jobs and greater income for the American people. No American prefers a bare subsistence income to the job envelope that comes with a real job. No sound or lasting recovery can be expected until our familiar cycle of demand and production is restored.

Throughout America millions of workers and earners who understand these facts will continue to urge on our national leaders the sincere cooperation and team-play on which such recovery depends—and without which the traditional American program of advancement for all our people is halted.

1-MINUTE SAFETY TALKS

By Don Herold

Broken Glass and Dented Fenders

Here are some tid-bit items in regard to automobile accidents which I have picked up here and there.

The Soviet Government recently executed a hit-and-run driver by the firing squad method.

Well, why not? Murder is murder whether you commit it with a six-shooter revolver or a six-cylinder motor car.

Not long ago, in a Midwestern traffic court, a driver who had been involved in an automobile accident was brought before a judge. It developed that he had been drinking, that he had a glass eye and that his car had little or no braking power. And I suppose he had one arm around a girl.

Warning horns are forbidden in Berlin; consequently drivers must keep a sharp lookout; the pedestrian death rate has been considerably reduced.

The horn-driver is still a menace in America.

A coupe going 60 miles an hour can turn over a 10-ton truck.

The steering wheel probably goes through your chest.

Want to try it?

More than 100,000 accidents a year are directly charged to drivers asleep.

About 60 per cent of the "autocides" occur at night according to The Travelers Insurance Company, when there is only 25 per cent of the traffic on the roads.

When it's dark, crawl, brother, crawl!

County Engineer Merten Tells Of Road Work Of Past Year

BY C. F. Merten, County Engineer

During 1937 Hancock County graded 48 miles of roads at a total cost of $32,871.91 or an average cost of $684.83 per mile. This includes payment to contractors, purchase of right of way, corrugated culvert pipe, dynamite for clearing, labor and equipment. The average mile of road constructed involved the moving of 10,000 cubic yards of earth.

67 miles of roads were graveled in 1937 at a total cost of $36,826.58 or an average of $549.65 per mile. This includes truck hire, labor, equipment, gravel pits, and the use of a drag line for taking gravel from under water. Gravel was placed on the road at the rate of 1000 cubic yards per mile.

Eleven wooden bridges were constructed at a cost of $6,987.59 for labor and material. The cost of these bridges varies with the length. The longest bridge (108 ft span) located between sections 25 and 26 Liberty Township cost $1,627.37 and the shortest bridge (12 ft. span) located in the town of Crystal Lake cost $220.60. Treated timber is used wherever there is danger of decay so the only expense on these bridges for several years will be the maintenance of the wearing surface. We are using an asphalt mat on the floors of our new bridges which is proving very satisfactory.

The County Trunk system which includes the main roads connecting the towns has been completely graded and surfaced for several years. The condition of the local road system which includes the farm to market roads connecting the rural sections with the towns was as follows on January 1, 1938.

Paved with concrete, 5 miles; Surfaced with gravel, 570 miles; Graded but not surfaced, 45 miles; Unimproved, 245 miles; Total local roads, 865 miles; Trunk roads, 120 miles; Grand total trunk and local, 985 miles.

The above classifications do not include the primary or State roads which are maintained by the State Highway Commission. The primary roads in this county are No. 18, No. 69, No. 111, No. 60 and the stubs into Klemme and Corwith. The County officials have no jurisdiction over the maintenance of the primary roads.

The cost of maintaining 985 miles of Hancock County roads in 1937 was $93,128.85 or a little less than $100.00 per mile. This includes all labor, material, and equipment for summer and winter maintenance, as well as gravel pits and truck hire for resurfacing.

Local labor and local contractors performed all of the road work with the exception of a small amount of drag line excavation for which a contractor from Winnebago County was employed. During the winter months road work gives employment to a large number of men who are unable to secure other work.

We will be pleased to give additional information in regard to Hancock County road work to anyone calling at the office of the County Engineer.

EIGHTH GRADERS OF ALL RURAL SCHOOLS TO TAKE EXAMINATIONS FEB. 3, 4

Eighth graders in the rural schools of Hancock county will take semi-annual examinations Thursday and Friday, Feb. 3 and 4, it was announced by Co. Supt. of Schools J. R. Baggs.

The exams will be given in all town schools of the county except Miller.

Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Jan. 26, 27 and 28, uniform county examinations will be given in the court room of the court house.

KLEMMME GIRL WILL ACCOMPANY CHOIR ON TWO WEEK'S TOUR

Miss Dolores Cook, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Cook, Avery township, has been selected to accompany the Morningside College choir on a two week's tour through nine southern states.

Important stops will be at Dallas, Galveston, and Houston, Texas; New Orleans, La., and other cities in the Gulf States.

The choir will make their trip in two new Greyhound Buses which are powered a motor in the rear, a new development in engineering.

EMILY PAUL FILES DAM- AGE SUIT FOR INJURIES RECEIVED LAST FEB.

Miss Emily Paul, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Paul, of Klemme, has filed a suit in district court against Virginia Shadle, also known as Mrs. Paul Phelps, asking $5,000 damages for injuries she says she received in an auto accident on February 2, 1937. Miss Paul was at that time a student in the Klemme high school and her injuries kept her from attending school.

COURT HOUSE LIQUOR TO BE DESTROYED

For several years a quantity of "Christmas cheer" has been accumulating in the vault of the court house at Garner. The stuff is illegal liquor taken in raids and consists of a gallon can and a dozen bottles. Judge Henry Craven has set February 12 (Washington's birthday) as the date for hearing any objections why the liquor should not be destroyed. The stuff will be destroyed after the hearing.

GOODELL WILL MEET SHAMROCKS IN CON- FERENCE GAME FRIDAY

Shamrocks Lead in Conference;
Goodell Has Two Defeats

For Klemme and Goodell fans the game to be played Friday evening is one of the big games of the season when the Klemme Shamrocks will meet the fast Goodell quintet in the second game of the season.

In an early season game the Shamrocks defeated Goodell on their home floor in a close game 29 to 27. It was the first time Goodell had been defeated on their home floor. A couple of weeks later Crystal Lake repeated by defeating Goodell on their home floor by the same score.

The Klemme Shamrocks will play Goodell without the services of Ray Jorgenson, Jr., who is suffering a severe ankle injury received in a game at Belmond last week.

Those who hold season tickets for the home games at Klemme, will be admitted by their ticket to the game at Garner Friday night.

SHAMROCKS TAKE EASY GAME FROM HAYFIELD

Grade Team Wins Handily In Curtain Raiser

Last Friday night Coach A. L. Kingery's Shamrocks downed the Hayfield cagers in an easy game, 49 to 5 on the Hayfield floor.

Schuldt, Grosshuesch and Trampel each garnered 14 points, Lau and Wicks each got a field goal, Kluckhohn two free throws and Grange one.

Sowder looked best for Hayfield by getting his teams only field goals and two free throws for four of the five Hayfield points.

Grades Win

The grade team led by Brinkman and Grosshuesch outscored the Hayfield grades 22 to 4.

After a bad first quarter when neither team scored, the Klemme grades began to hit the hoop and the half score stood at 8 to 2 in favor of Klemme. In the second half Grosshuesch and Brinkman went on a scoring spree and put the ball through the hoop almost at will.

Grosshuesch and Brinkman each got 8 points, Zabilka 4 and Kaduce 2. Nelson got all 4 of the Hayfield points.

FOREST CITYAN FINED

GARNER—Orville T. Eames of Forest City was fined $5 and costs by Justice H. V. Reed Thursday.

Driving a coupe with an air windmill generator attached to the back with a total expansion of 16 inches beyond the car fenders contrary to traffic regulations caused the arrest to be made by a state highway patrolman.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It is a little early in the new year to become despondent.

"Bill's" Not Happy

I suppose, after the manner of a certain radio star, I ought to be happy about the whole thing. But I am not. The outlook is too gloomy. Developments of the last few weeks have combined to make me a pessimist of the first water. I hope I am wrong; yet, present conditions force the conclusion that this country faces a condition as serious as that through which it passed in 1932 and 1933. There is no reason evident to me why we should not face the facts, discouraging as they appear.

So, let us consider some of the things that have happened lately, and some that are happening these days. Only in that way, I believe, can we get a correct understanding of this new depression which a thousand government propagandists insist upon calling a "recession."

Four months ago, industry began to lay off men and women workers. There was no market for the goods they were manufacturing. The reduction in payrolls was necessary to avoid bankruptcy. Nobody can afford to pay workers if there is no work to do. Dismissal of workers continued in an ever-growing volume until on January 1, the great General Motors corporation laid off something like 60,000 men at one time and placed its remaining 200,000 workers on a four-day week. That action, while it appears sensational, was illustrative of what had been going on during the four months that I mentioned; it brought public attention and political attention to a focus, but it was sensational only because of the numbers. It made an impression that dismissal of a few or several hundred here and there had failed to make.

During this same period, prices were undergoing a natural and normal reaction. Some were up; some were down. Altogether, they were and are in a topsy-turvy condition.

Government business analysts smelled the mouse. They were watching all of the trends that were evident during those four months. Those officials in high places and charged with responsibility for national welfare were informed of what was in prospect. But government propaganda continued to show bright and smiling faces in the picture. It won't last, they were saying in the written and spoken words. It is a psychological condition, President Roosevelt said—and thereby made the same mistake that President Hoover made when he announced that prosperity was just around the corner in 1931. It is the same old corner and it is the same old prosperity, but apparently the Roosevelt administration is going to have just as much trouble finding either the corner or the prosperity as Mr. Hoover did.

To get back to the sequence of events: the time came when the responsible officials had to say something by way of admitting the existence of the depression "recession." Mr. Roosevelt, it will be recalled, went off on a fishing trip around December 1. He took with him the brilliant and able young Robert Jackson, of the Department of Justice. Now, Mr. Jackson's particular ability lies in the direction of breaking up trusts, monopolies, big business combinations. Those of us whose job it is to watch Washington, thought we foresaw the next move by the administration. We have it now in full flower—a great drive against all of those sinful big business interests who simply must be the folks responsible for the depression. Of course, it should be remembered at the same time that there must be a "goat" when politics gets balled up, and big business again is the "goat" of the administration.

In consequence of the crash in business, the collapse of the theories of the long-haired crew that seeks to remould America under the guise of New Deal plans, and the general running out of Democrats on the New Deal leadership, the country is now to be treated to another trust-busting drive comparable to that conducted by the late Theodore Roosevelt when he was President. Yes, big business can always be attacked, cajoled, threatened. It is a proper stunt, nearly always resorted to by politicians and others who find themselves locked within the meshes of their own fishnets. Big business is the red herring that the administration is trying to drag across the trail. It is because the administration is attempting to conceal its mistakes, and make people forget them instead of doing a constructive job that I find myself despondent in the early weeks of 1938.

The real tip-off to the drive on big business was in the form of a speech by Mr. Jackson who said by way of the radio that:

"The only way to insure a reasonably steady well-being for the nation as a whole is for the government to act as an impartial overseer of our industrial progress, ready to call a halt at all times on monopolistic practices which threaten to throw our economy out of order."

"That theory is basic with most of the New Dealers. America must be made responsive to the Washington government. It is that theory to which more and more business men, little as well as big, are objecting. They are fearful of it for the reason that they can not see how this administration or any that may follow will be "impartial" in overseeing industry. It is quite natural for a political group to be intent upon preserving itself in power, and that end never has been accomplished by impartiality."

But the New Dealers wish to avoid blame for the conditions now confronting the nation. Conveniently enough, there is no mention being made now of the tremendous pressure that was exerted through four of the last five years to bring about higher prices. Those prices now are held to be the result of monopoly, not the fault of the professors who were saying a few years ago when prices were moving higher that "we planned it that way."

So political guns are turned on big business—but my guess is that little business will be hurt more than big business by the refusal of the Wallaces, the Ickes, the Oliphants, the Jerome Franks, the Corcorans and the Cohens to recognize that Hitler's style of business management must fail here as in Germany.

The frankest statement about the whole thing has come from Mr. Roosevelt himself. He declared recently that "over-extension of inventories" was responsible for the current depression. That is to say, producers and manufacturers, feeling that business was booming, produced or manufactured too much. They did not recognize that the better business we appeared to have in 1935 and 1936 was highly superficial. Nor were they aware what the Washington government would do in the way of controlling or burdening business of all kinds with new taxation and new restrictive legislation.

It was from those latter two things that a fear was bred and the factories and farms that were being worked full tilt because prices were going higher were left with an overstock. I think it can be fairly said also that few persons expected to see such encouragement from the administration for labor to flout the law and take over control of property as has happened. Whatever else may be said, however, the fact remains the theories constantly being advanced by one or another of Mr. Roosevelt's advisers have frightened millions of persons who still have a few dollars which they would like to put to work. On the whole, I am convinced those dollars will not be put to work unless and until there is assurance from Washington that sanity and not monkey-doodle schemes will be exercised in governmental dealings with the country's business. It is dishonest on the part of government, regardless of political party, to charge that business brings about depressions; any person with a grain of sense must know that no individual desires to throw away his own money or throw away a chance to make more.

President Roosevelt has taken a firm stand for a larger navy. His action deserves commendation. Conditions throughout the world are such that he would be foolish to regard the necessity for a strong defense. It will cost money, of course, but preparedness has proved cheaper always than being thrown into war because no other nation is afraid of us.

I have an idea that Mr. Roosevelt will be attacked from a dozen different directions. So-called peace organizations will try to pin his ears back and make him say "uncle," but I have gained the impression that Mr. Roosevelt will adhere to his program. Certainly, nearly all students of international affairs agree that he is 100 per cent right.

In a letter to house leaders, Mr. Roosevelt suggested the necessity for construction of two battleships, two light cruisers, eight destroyers and six submarines during the fiscal year beginning next July 1. These craft are in addition to other naval construction already considered for the next fiscal year. It will take two or three years to build some of these boats. Planning and preliminary work ought to be started on them as soon as possible. Mr. Roosevelt believes the work ought to start right away—and after all I think most folks will agree that the President is in a better position than anyone else in the country to know what the dangers are.

Lesson for January 2

MINISTERING TO PHYSICAL NEEDS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:29-45.
GOLDEN TEXT—And he healed that were sick—Mark 1:34.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Went to Peter's House.
JUNIOR TOPIC—When Jesus Went to Peter's House.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Helping the Sick.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christianity's Concern for Physical Needs.

"The Mystery of Painlessness" is the title of a book published years ago, in which the author pointed out that instead of being the physical ailments of which we should thankfully recognize much of life is without pain. It is point to the suggestion, by one who has reached the years of maturity and who has stood shoulder to shoulder with suffering kind is very conscious of the silent cry of those whose bodies are in need.

Our Lord was tender and compassionate of man. It was to him the great host of impotent—the lame, the halt, the sick, the blind—came for healing, and came not in vain. Note, too, that in the midst of his work of mercy he did not forget his objective, which was to deal with man's sin.

I. Healing (v. 29).

First, we find our Lord teaching, sharing the sorrow of the hour a friend. One can picture the hush that hovered over home as distressed relatives and friends sought to alleviate the suffering of the one with a fever. Many have gone through that dark valley. All at once there was new and soon there was joy. Jesus came and had brought healing. Many of us have also had blessed experience.

Note that the healing was instantaneous and the restoration complete. She arose to serve typifies God's healing of the mess of the soul. If you are ready to stand up and serve.

Christianity is not a selfish religion if it follows its Lord. We see verses 32 to 34 that all that came to his door with the demon—possessed, healed them all. The account of the kindly and intelligent of the sick is written large in the pages of the history of the Church.

II. Praying (v. 35).

The Son of God sought out a time for prayer communion with his Father. How often we profess to follow him fail to do so. Certainly we need the power that prayer can give us far more than Jesus did. But we are so busy. So we are tired. So was he.

III. Preaching (vv. 36-39).

Jesus said, "Let us go . . . may preach . . . for therefore I forth." It bears repetition in age when men magnify the of mighty deeds, that while did many miracles (and not moment would we detract their worth and glory) yet repeatedly, by word and act, emphasized the importance of preaching.

Foolish though it may seem the natural man (read I Cor. 2:14), preaching the gospel in power of the Holy Spirit is not it has been through the centuries God's chosen means of turning the world upside down (Acts 17:31). What a pity that churches and pastors are forsaking it for book views, dramas, social hours, rums, community centers, and not! God give us a revival of the humble, and fearless preaching the Word!

IV. Cleansing (vv. 40-45).

There is a sense in which cleansing of the leper was an act of healing, but leprosy is a striking type of sin that the individual calls for special consideration. Leprosy is like sin in that it is a destructive malady that pursues its insidious way without revealing true nature until it is far advanced. It renders a man unclean, loathsome to himself and dangerous to others. At least such it was in the days of our Lord.

Is there no hope for the leper? Yes; Jesus has come. The sinner cries out, "If thou wilt, canst make me clean."

So, also, may the sinner be cleansed, for "whosoever shall upon the name of the Lord be saved" (Rom. 10:13). He will not turn the vilest of sinners.

The Feeling of Power

He knows that power is unobtainable, and so perceiving throws himself unhesitatingly upon his thoughts, stands erect position, commands his works miracles; just as a man stands on his feet is stronger than a man who stands on his head.

Beauty

This is what we want—we want the vision of a calmer and simpler beauty to tranquilize us in the midst of artificial tastes.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

INSPIRED by the swarm of locusts in "The Good Earth" and the terrific storm in Goldwyn's "Hurricane," several motion-picture producers have set out to capture honors for staging spectacles that make your hair stand on end.

Advance reports indicate that Twentieth Century-Fox have topped all in the matter of spectacular destruction. This company in filming "In Old Chicago," staged a fire that destroyed a sixty-acre city. In the midst of stampeding cattle and terror-stricken crowds, gas mains burst and shoot pillars of flame high into the air, oil gushes from tanks and sets the river ablaze, iron girders melt.

Before this cycle of horrors catches up with our screens, we should give thanks to Carole Lombard for providing us with another completely loony comedy, "True Confession." No one can play a girl who seems not quite bright with the gusto of the beautiful Lombard and in this she has the perfect role for her, that of a girl who just cannot tell the truth.

Carole Lombard

Radio programs that introduce you to your neighbors, both famous and obscure, and act as community get-togethers are getting more popular every day. Charles Martin's "Front Page News" and "Thrill of the Week" have been renewed for a year. Edgar Guest's "It Can Be Done," Bob Ripley's program and Gabriel Heatter's "We, the People" are slated for a long and successful life. Paul Wing's Sunday morning spelling bee over NBC has a list of applications yards long from people who are eager to test their prowess.

Jean Muir was a very unhappy girl when she left Hollywood a few weeks ago. For the three years or so that she was under contract to Warner Brothers she had been pleading for a good role in one of their big pictures, but they relegated her to dull parts in quickly-made films. Now Jean can rejoice that Hollywood let her go. She opened in a play in London and two talent scouts cabled Hollywood that she was the big find of the year. She will probably come back with a contract calling for a much bigger salary, much better parts.

The most important member of Benny Goodman's swing band is a woman, and she doesn't play an instrument. She holds the checkbook. So while you won't see her with the boys in "Hollywood Hotel" you can just figure that she is there in spirit. She is Ethel Goodman, elder sister of Benny, and in the year that she has been with the band she has not only kept all accounts straight, she has mothered the boys, taking care of them when they were ill, bullying them when they wouldn't eat their spinach or get enough sleep, sympathizing with them when they were unhappy.

Marek Weber, distinguished Viennese orchestra leader beginning his direction of the Carnation "Contented Hour" this month, succeeds Dr. Frank Black, whose duties as general musical director of NBC forced him to relinquish the baton. With Weber's debut as conductor, "The Contented Hour" enters upon its seventh consecutive year on the air. In Europe, Weber is known as "the Toscanini of light music." Franz Lehár, composer of "The Merry Widow," said of him, "I cannot wish for a better interpreter of my works than Marek Weber."

Marek Weber

ODDS AND ENDS—Jack Benny won't start working on his next picture for a few weeks, so Paramount has assigned his old dressing room to Marlene Dietrich. Jack and his radio script writers are no end upset because that is where they do their best work. Myrna Loy encourages the freckles on her face by going about in the sun hatless. The freckles serve as a fine disguise when she appears in public. Edward G. Robinson's new picture "The Last Gangster" is the best gangster film of all. Glenn Morris who stars in "Tarzan's Revenge" says exactly four words in the whole picture. Tony, the back-stage boothlark at the B. S. playhouse in New York, has his own way of honoring Kate Smith. It keeps a special rag in his left hip pocket with which he shines her shoes just before she goes to the mike. Bing Crosby and George Murphy entertained the shoppers in a Hollywood store no end when George decided to play floorwalk and Bing decided to sell handkerchiefs. When customers balked, Bing threw in song.

Simple or Sophisticated?

A PRETTY girl is like a melody and her frock is the swing in it that makes you remember her—and never lets you forget. Sew-Your-Own puts that "remember me" ingredient into all frocks, from its simple all-occasion models to its more exclusive fashion frocks. You, Milady, have an exceptional opportunity today to choose an engaging frock from this taking trio. Just send for your pattern and Sew-Your-Own will do the rest—see you through every step to a happy, successful finish, or, in other words, to a thrilling frock fortified with much "Remember me."

Five Shipshape Pieces.

Start your day in an attractive morning frock if you would leave a bright all-day impression on the family. Sew-Your-Own suggests the new, young-looking dress at the left for creating a really lasting impression. It will impress you, too, for the five pieces fit together so effortlessly and produce such shipshape style that you'll be not only pleased but thrilled. Gingham, percale, or seersucker is the material suggested for this popular frock.

Exclusive Looking.

A beautifully styled frock that will lend a festive feeling and a note of glamour to every occasion is the smart new piece, above center. It is modern of line, gracious of detail, and flattering beyond belief. The new tucked skirt looks important, yes, even exclusive, but happily for you, Milady, it's as easy to sew as any you've done. Note the little button trim and youthful collar and cuffs to add that telling touch of good taste. Make a copy for now in satin or silk crepe.

Come-Get-Me Look.

Winter is here, but Spring is packaged up for an early delivery, which would behoove the fastidious young woman to now turn her gentle thoughts to the problem of what-to-wear. The slim-waisted model, above right, should set one straight, both in matters of thoughts and actions, for it has that come-and-get-me look that's so typical of the modern Sew-Your-Own. The "act" of sewing is most simplified in this little number, as the seven pieces and the cut-away diagram clearly illustrate. Make this frock in duplicate for your complete chic and resistance to clothes worries.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1431 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35-inch material. The collar in contrast requires 3/4 of a yard.

Pattern 1436 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material, plus 1/2 yard contrasting. With long sleeves 3 3/4 yards are required.

Pattern 1435 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 40 bust). Size 14 requires 4 1/4 yards of 39-inch material, plus 3/4 yard contrasting.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

FEEL MISERABLE?

Des Moines, Iowa—Mrs. Mary Ann Parker, 1503 Capitol Ave., says: "I felt so miserable from nervousness and headaches associated with functional disturbances and had hardly any strength. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription helped to strengthen me wonderfully and I had very little difficulty after its use." Buy it in liquid or tablets from your druggist today. See how much calmer and stronger you feel.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

MOTHS WILL WORK IN WINTER TOO IN WELL HEATED HOUSES

Snappy winter weather does not stop the riddling of clothes by moths in well heated homes, contrary to the belief of some people, declares C. H. Richardson, entomologist at Iowa State College.

It is true that moths work most in the spring and summer, but in warm, dark clothes closets, they may be active and destructive in the winter too.

Because of this fact, clothes which are worn only infrequently should be brushed thoroughly, especially under collars in pockets, along seams, hung in the sun or dry cleaned and then stored in heavy moth-proof bags or tight boxes.

Naphthalene flakes should be sprinkled on cloths at the rate of one pound per 10 cubic feet of the clothes container. If the odor of naphthalene is disliked, the more expensive paradichlorobenzene may be used.

Overstuffed furniture which has become infested with moths should be removed from the house and drenched with cleansers naphtha or with white gasoline which contains no anti-knock compound.

Moths breed the year around and one moth will lay 100 to 200 eggs.

ACCIDENTALLY FIND MATERIAL FOR INSULATION

Engineers Make Discovery Hunting Minerals In Montana Hill.

An accidental discovery by a party of engineers seeking mineral deposits in the mountainous Kootenai district of Montana resulted in the introduction to home owners in this vicinity of a new insulating material, Zonolite.

One day the engineers accidentally heated what looked like ordinary mica. They were amazed to see that the area affected by the flame was actually changing in color and expanding under the heat.

Curiosity led the engineers to take samples of the material from Mount Zonolite, as the place of discovery has since been named, and to subject them to various tests.

Expands 20 Times

It was found that the specimens expanded 15 to 20 times in volume under a 2,000 degree temperature; that the mineral developed high insulation value; an unusual degree of sound absorption; and exceptional acoustical qualities. Tiny dead air cells were found in every granule, even in pieces the size of a pin head.

Zonolite is commercially expanded by the scientific application of heat, a carefully controlled, patented process through which the crude material passes in specially designed Zonolite furnaces, bringing the material to its maximum state of gleaming, reflective brilliancy.

Effective Barrier

Once poured in, Zonolite insulation serves as an effective barrier to the passages of heat, to wanted heat which escapes through walls and ceilings in the winter, and to unwanted heat which seeps inside the house on torrid summer days. Zonolite being a granular material, is extremely simple to install by pouring.

TEACHERS TO GIVE MOUNTAIN MUMPS FEBRUARY 2ND AND 3RD

Plenty Of Laughs In Comedy To Be Put On By Local Pedagogues

"Mountain Mumps," the play to be presented by the school faculty and alumni dramatic stars at the high school gymnasium next Wednesday and Thursday evenings, February 2nd and 3rd, will prove an eye-opener for those who believe "there is nothing new under the sun."

A charming girl enters the household of a mad family and is forced to play a role of which she knows nothing. Suddenly she wakes to the realization that she is a niece and is expected to ward off starvation with her paltry earnings. She accepts the task and the riot begins.

When she gets the low-down on the family, she decides to give them one of the most exciting interludes that ever disturbed the tranquility of their existence. Then the door begins to open and trouble keeps popping in. A broker comes to foreclose the mortgage on the home. He finishes by proposing marriage to the mad Mrs. Chilton. A modern youth comes to sneer. He falls for Florence, the oldest daughter. An officer comes to arrest Cal, the spoiled son. He is captured instead by the alluring Sue. A young inventor comes to promote Mrs. Chilton to perfect his gold mill. He not only finds his end of the rainbow but walks into enough romance to keep him busy for the remainder of his life. A society matron and her daughter enter like social lions to witness the downfall of the Chiltons. They go out as meek as Mary's lamb, completely defeated. A physician comes to cure a case of mumps and finds the rarest specie of this malady that was ever imported from India.

And to think that all this was accomplished by a lovely girl who started the eruption of the volcano and then turned the lava into milk and honey. Word's can't describe this unusual play, nor will it pay you to miss it.

1937 Illinois Corn Performance Test Results

Prove "All Around" Ability of

PIONEER

The Quality Hybrid Seed Corn

THE results of the 1937 Illinois Corn Performance Tests, conducted by the Illinois Agricultural Experiment Station, Urbana, Ill., Bulletin No. 440—again prove "all-around" ability of PIONEER—the Quality Hybrid Corn.

In the North Section Illinois Test (similar to North-Iowa)—PIONEER had 10 entries out of a total of And five (5) PIONEER hybrids were among the top No competitor had more than two places among the 15.

And, as usual, PIONEER had a high General Performance Rating. It yielded high—it stood up well—it yielded a corn of uniform quality and higher feeding value.

In considering the results of the Official 1937 Illinois Performance Tests it is well to bear in mind that PIONEER entries were not special "show-ring" hybrids but were the very same kind that corn growers are buying every day. Insist on buying your hybrid corn by number. Insist, also, upon knowing the record behind it. For Sturdier Crops—Bigger Yields and GREATER PROFITS—it pays to plant PIONEER—the Quality Hybrid Seed Corn.

For the BEST VALUE in Quality Hybrid Seed Corn. See Your Local PIONEER Representative

If Paul wouldn't gaze into Novella's eyes so much during school time he probably wouldn't be called down so often. Novella says it's nice to have Paul do that, but she wishes it were Buster.

-OO-

Buster certainly did a good job of showing off for the girl he met at Belmond. It probably made her feel sorry for you, Buster, but was it worth it?

A group of boys seem to have the idea that you should never get to school on time, should forget your lessons, raise cane, go up town during school time, forget to come back, and tell the teachers that you got stuck.

Irene B. seems to enjoy Johnny Schwichtenberg's company very much. Maybe the teachers could have them sit a little nearer during classes.

MUSIC NEWS

The girl's glee club has practiced on some new pieces the past week. One of the pieces was a Suabian folk song, "In Silent Night." The English version of this folk song is by Alfred Marlhom, the arrangement by Johannes Brahms, and it was hamonized by Wallingford Riegger. The other was, "A Madrigal in May" an arrangement by Sumner Salter. The words are by Alfred Hyatt and the music is by Ernest Newton. The glee club plans to use these pieces for contest work.

SPORTS CHATTER

(by "Flash")

The fans don't think that Klemme has been doing so well the last few games. Well, we are saving that for Goodell. The Boys on the team seem to have quite a number of colds, maybe they get too much fresh air nights. Don't think that we will have an easy time next time we play Crystal Lake. I hear they came down here with half a team—the other half was crippled. It takes Capt. Schuldt to eat oysters. You should have seen him after the Crystal Lake game. Well, our first defeat was down at Belmond, but we aren't ashamed of it, because we played them without our sharpshooter, "Buster." He sprained his ankle at the beginning of the game. We gave them all they wanted just the same. If you never have seen a bunch of basketball players down in the dumps you should have seen us after the Belmond game. All the guys on the team take their hats off to "Cy-clone" Kluckhohn. You played a good game down at Belmond, Genie. We know now why Klemme got beat by Belmond—Buster changed to black shoe strings. And, another thing, Miss Brakel, who had been at every game before that, missed the Belmond game.

Grade School News

Grades 1 and 2

The bulbs that we planted just after Christmas vacation have tall green shoots. We hope to find a bud some day soon.

On Thursday we held a "peanut hunt." Norman found the most peanuts.

Some of the second graders have been reading stories to us during story time this week. They are: Joyce, Edward, Donna, Esther, Rose, Robert, and Hellen. Two first graders, Iris and Marjorie, read stories, too.

The first graders made spelling books this week. They will write in them on Fridays.

Grades 3 and 4

The boys and girls who were neither absent nor tardy for the first semester, were. Ruth Bell, Elizabeth Goll, Dean Jacobs, Harold Schwartz, Esther Tiggeman and Velma Tiggeman.

These boys and girls had an average of "B" or above in their major subjects: Ruth Bell, Phyllis Christiance, Peggy Coobs, and Roger Ridder.

The fourth graders have started their library project. They have classified the books and are ready to begin their cataloging and card files

We are using the Weekly Reader, a children's newspaper, in both grades this semester.

Our new subject is Health. The third graders are making a Health Scrapbook of their own drawings. The fourth graders are working on free-hand cuttings to show the signs of health.

Grades 5 and 6

Patricia Kudje and Juha Bell —Reporters

The fifth graders are working a new kind of arithmetic problem. We are adding and subtracting whole numbers and fractions. We think they are fun.

We got new drawing boards this week. Everyone in our room has one now

The sixth graders have started a unit on Norway and Sweden. It is very interesting.

Patricia and Marjorie brought some new books this week for the reading table.

We got our semester test papers back and our report cards this week.

Grades 7 and 8

The people who have not been absent or tardy during the first semester are: Billy Grosshuesch, Eugene Haberkamp, Elwyn Jacobs, Caroline Schwartz, Edwin Tiggeman, Arlene Buseman, Lucille Hartbeck and Billy Zabilka.

Wednesday morning the R. E. A. D. club held a meeting during English period. Several book reviews were given.

The seventh grade history class is working on an interesting unit on "Discovery and Exploration."

Does Japan MASK Her Purpose?

Who Is the Enemy—China or the White Man?

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

In Shanghai last July two Japanese naval underlings were allegedly slain by the Chinese. In retaliation a whole fleet of stern-nosed Nipponese battle-ships appeared from nowhere and began shelling Shanghai. That was the start of Japan's current "war of defense" in China. If some of us scratch our heads over the "war of defense" idea, it may as well be explained that the Sino-Jap situation is full of paradoxes and puzzles. For example:

Japan fears foreign criticism but invites it by shelling American and British ships.

She claims to be helping China while bombing cities, slaughtering innocent natives and destroying everything in sight.

She dislikes Westerners, yet makes a Fascist pact with Germany and Italy.

She signed the nine-power treaty guaranteeing China's integrity, yet now invades that country.

Such, perhaps, is the history of all nations that go to war, breaking treaties and casting aside long-established governmental tenets. If Japan's unusual attitude seems more hysterical than that of the average nation at war, it's either because the Japs are naive or extremely clever. Probably they're clever, so clever that Western powers are just beginning to understand this Chinese invasion.

Japan, some observers say, is warring not on China, but on Western domination in the Orient. The "divine destiny" she pursues is a union of all Asiatic nations under Japanese domination. The net result will be expulsion of British, French, American and Portuguese commercial interests.

Apologies Come Fast.

Diplomatic files of both America and Great Britain are choked with so-called "apologies" for hostile acts such as the Panay incident, bombing of H. M. S. Ladybird and the aerial attack on Britain's ambassador to China. But despite these apologies the incidents continue. And, amazingly, many recent Oriental attacks on Western powers have come from the Chinese!

A Chinese pilot bombed the S. S. President Hoover. Later a Chinese anti-aircraft shell killed a sailor on the U. S. S. Augusta. In fairness to the Chinese it should be admitted that both these attacks may have been accidental. But Nationals in Shanghai during the last days of its ish, American and other traders accepted these insulting terms because their ships sailed homeward laden with richer tribute than they had brought.

This Japanese soldier in a "mechanical ear" outpost wears a gas mask after beating off a Chinese attack. Chinese authorities have charged the invaders with using poison gas.

Opium Restrictions Lifted.

Occidentals were responsible for China's opium curse, for they began smuggling it from India late in the Eighteenth century despite governmental edicts to the contrary. In 1839 when China confiscated British opium the English sent ships and soldiers, destroyed half of Canton and forced China to sign her first humiliating treaty in 1842.

Grudgingly, she later made pacts with other Occidental powers and permitted establishment of the international settlement in Shanghai. But China resented these privileges of the white men and there was more bloodshed in 1856, after which Britain won trading rights at five additional ports. Opium importation restrictions were also relaxed to Britain's glee and poor China's misery.

In 1859 British and French ships were attacked at Taku. Within two years the allies had taken Peking and forced still another treaty down China's throat. Some time later came establishment of the European controlled imperial customs service at Shanghai. Western conquest of China was growing rapidly. Shanghai and other cities became Occidental, featured by skyscrapers, European dress and the white man's customs. China, proud of her ancient culture, kept the resentment of this intrusion rankling in her breast. The American Indian probably felt the same way, and both have been justified.

Japan entered the picture prominently during the World war when she seized German possessions in Shantung and gained broad commercial and mining privileges with her notorious 21 demands. At the danger of "losing face." To be blunt, we depend not on power but on prestige to maintain our position in the Far East. It is a colossal bluff which is being called today by the clever Japanese. For Nippon has discovered that our lofty idealism and morality are hypocritical and has decided to beat us at our own game. Instead of prestige, Japan is using power to conquer China.

Great Britain will be the greatest loser in this inevitable trade argument with Japan. In addition to being the largest foreign investor in China, she is Nippon's favorite target by virtue of her belief in the open door policy for China. English colonists are so prominent and well-established in the Far East as to be synonymous (in the Japanese mind) with all that is wrong with Occidentals.

America's loss cannot be as large. A 1933 survey showed that United States citizens have about $150,000,000 invested in China, representing 1.3 of all investments beyond our frontiers. American money amounts to about 7 per cent of all foreign capital in China. In order of investments, Great Britain is first, Japan second, Russia third and the United States fourth. Almost two-thirds of the American investment is centered in Shanghai.

The Question: Japan's Policy.

What will happen to Occidental investments in China must remain a matter of conjecture, dependent, first, on what policy the victorious Japanese may wish to adopt, and whether they wish to abide by the "open door" doctrine to which they subscribed at the Washington naval conference. It is doubtful if they will.

Quite obviously, every advantage will be accorded Japanese merchants. Already the imperial customs service at Shanghai has been removed from European hands and placed under Nipponese domination. This means that Japanese goods may enter China duty-free while American and British goods will be assessed heavily.

But does Japan dare close China's door to Britain and America? And do Britain and America—in turn—dare risk incurring Japan's enmity by protesting too loudly against the invasion of China? The truth of the matter is that Britain and America buy 53 per cent of Japan's exports, whereas the same two countries account for 65 per cent of Japan's imports. In terms of trade, the three nations are mutually dependent.

Last year 23 per cent of America's cotton crop landed on Japan's shores, in addition to $30,000,000 worth of oil, $8,000,000 in lumber, $6,000,000 in wood pulp, $10,000,000 in machinery and $9,000,000 in miscellaneous purchases. In all, 10 per cent of America's exports go to Japan each year.

Hands-Off Policy.

In the light of the Occidental nations' stake in the Orient, it is easy to understand why Britain and America are forsaking the mailed fist in favor of polite diplomatic exchanges with Japan on such topics as the Panay and Ladybird incidents.

China is not yet beaten. Her policy has been and will be one of strategic retreat, pulling the enemy farther away from home and thus making guerilla warfare more successful. Meanwhile Japan finds her war expense mounting rapidly and the folks back home may eventually get tired of paying the bills.

It is generally conceded that Japan must hold out two years to win a complete victory. If she does, she will control China and can hold the Western nations at her mercy. If China wins, Japan will be driven back to her island empire but the Occidentals will not necessarily profit. On the contrary China's years of grief will have welded its peoples into a strong, purposeful nation, ready to trample on the foreigners who now hold sway in her rich cities.

Either way you figure it, the Yellow Peril has become the white man's peril.

Our artist this week is just back from his first visit to the big city, and here he records his impression. His mind, however, was still evidently miles away, for we can see several bad mistakes. There are fifteen in all. Can you find them? The answers will be found above.

As was ever the case in war, the women and children are the real sufferers in the Sino-Jap hostilities. Using every conceivable type of vehicle, thousands fled such cities as Tientsin, Shanghai and Nanking, where Japanese rained down bombs that slaughtered thousands. This photograph was made as refugees sought admittance to the international settlement at Tientsin during an early flareup.

seize were in more danger of harm from enraged Chinese troops than from the attacking Japs

Japan's habit of attaching an apology to the tail of every bomb she drops on Westerners in China is, to say the least, beginning to reek of insincerity. The Panay attack and several others have been established as deliberate. We can take little solace from the fact that Japanese civilians are opposed to such tactics, because only the army and navy count in Nippon. The emperor, the premier and the people are puppets.

Occidentals have never been popular in the Orient. Three centuries ago they invaded China like they invaded America 200 years earlier, selfish in their interests, despised and suspected. They were tribute bearers, later to become tribute takers. Canton was designated by the emperor as their sole trading and residence area, and only a few Chinese merchants were permitted to have dealings with them. But Brit-

Washington conference she was forced to relinquish many of these gains, but the die had been cast. She showed little hesitation about breaking treaties when Manchuria began to look tempting. Her national self-esteem has grown tremendously until Japan now feels a patriotic duty in uniting the Orient under her domination.

Thus the Occidentals have two forces driving them out of China: first, the Chinaman's natural hostility and, second, Japan's "divine destiny" in the Orient.

Our "Word of Honor."

White men are "losing face" in the Far East. They have encouraged Japan to break treaties by setting a precedent in the matter, thereby parading their weaknesses before the yellow man. The Orient can no longer rely on the white man's "word of honor."

Snake as Medicine Familiar in Many Countries and Ages

New York.—Serpents twined the staff of Aesculap, classic patron of medicine; a brazen serpent upraised the desert healed the stricken Israelites who only looked on it. Now deeply entwined with medicine everywhere and in all times the subtle snake, Clifford H. Pope writes in his new book, "Snakes Alive" (Viking Press).

Snakes are used to hearing, in a surgical way, about the weird edicts of native Chinese druggists, and so are not surprised to learn that the Chinese pharmacopoeia includes snake "slough, skin, flesh, fat and oil, head, eye, teeth, eggs, and bones."

"Snake Oil" in America.

The "snake oil" is still a widely commodity in these Enlightened States of America—and it is still faked at that! Federal seizure and condemnation of "rattle-snake oil liniment" that contained "if any snake oil" is a matter of recent record. And in France "treacle" of snake-ingredients was used as official remedy as late as 1864.

One hundred years ago, a favorite remedy for scurvy was "viper's flesh and sarsaparilla," for inducing a sweat physicians recommended "compound of vipers" which was used very successfully in the Great Britain of London in 1665.

Recipe for Vipers.

In 1685 Madame de Sevigne, one of the most cultured of Frenchwomen, recommended vipers in one of her famous letters:

"Viper's temper, purity, and refreshment. But real flesh must be used, not the powder. Ask M. de la Roche to send you ten dozen vipers. Take a couple every morning, for the heads, have them skinned, chopped up and stuffed in a bag. Do this for a month, and I can blame your brother if M. de la Roche does not become as well as you could wish him to be."

Woman Gang Up to Protect Their Rights

Philadelphia.—African women met together to safeguard "women's rights" and they meet in secret—no men allowed.

An American expedition has been studying the little-known people of Sierra Leone, in West Africa.

Men and women of this tribe have secret societies, from the opposite sex is rigidly excluded. H. U. Hall told the American Philosophical Society here, regarding a study of customs sponsored by the society and the University of Pennsylvania.

Ad British authority became effective in southern Sierra Leone, the secret society held even more power than the native chieftains, usually in maintaining law and order.

It is still powerful and flourishing, Mr. Hall said. Not to be a man, as the society is, is not to be a man at all, in his opinion.

The counterpart of the Porro, for women, said Mr. Hall, "is the women's society. It is the champion of women's rights and privileges. Novices are instructed in the duties of womanhood, during a period of seclusion. Bondo, Bush, or grove, similar that, undergone by Porro initiation in their Bush."

Personality Is Affected by Curare Use

Philadelphia.—Dual personality was created experimentally in a psychological laboratory at the University of Illinois, by the use of South American arrow poison, Dr. E. A. Culler told the members of the American Philosophical Society here.

Subjects learned in one personality while living in the other, Dr. Culler said. Dogs were the subjects of the Jekyll-Hyde experiment, by depressing the central nervous system.

Learning takes place in the cortex of the brain, but when it is affected by a powerful drug, such as curare, learning can take place at a lower level involuntarily, subcortical parts of the nervous system.

What is learned during the dual personality is forgotten under the influence of curare. What learned during the curare personality when the animal is functioning on the lower level, is similarly forgotten when he returns to his normal personality.

Phosphorus Is Now Made and Shipped in Tank Car Lots

New York.—Phosphorus, the chemical element which bursts into flame when exposed to air, is now being produced, and shipped, in tank car lots to open up a new field for chemical industry.

This achievement is being hailed as one of the outstanding chemical industrial developments of the year. It has just been recognized by the presentation here of the Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering award to the Monsanto Chemical company for this development.

Elemental phosphorus has long interested scientists. Its spontaneous burning is fascinating as well as dangerous. Because it ignites easily and glows in the dark, the ancient alchemists named the element phosphorus mirabilis—"miraculous bearer of light."

Of Vast Importance.

In life and death, peace and war, industry and agriculture, phosphorus is an element interwoven with modern civilization. When you eat cakes or other bakery products made with baking powder, the action of phosphorus is entering your existence. When you strike a match the sparks and flame come from the phosphorus present. There is phosphorus in your bones and those of any animal. And the farmer requires phosphorus fertilizer to replenish his soil so that crops will grow. In war—in the air, on the ground or on the oceans—phosphorus comes into its own as the creator of dense smoke screens which shield a military force from its enemies. Deadly poisons—used commercially to exterminate rats—contain phosphorus.

For years the phosphorus in animal bones was the principal source of the strange element. But gradually it was found that by heat-treatment the phosphorus in certain rocks could be removed as a vapor and condensed under water to yield the waxy-colored element.

New Method of Production.

The newer way, and the method for which the Monsanto Chemical company received the current award, is to obtain the phosphorus with the heat of an electric furnace.

Sand, rock containing calcium phosphate, and coke are fed into the electric furnace. In the high temperature of the carbon arc (6,620 degrees Fahrenheit) the three raw products react to create carbon monoxide and elemental phosphorus in the form of a vapor. Because the phosphorus readily and dangerously combines with air, the whole industrial operation must be carried out under reduced pressure or else in a vapor of hydrogen or nitrogen. Purification of the phosphorus vapor condensed under water can be accomplished by melting the element and stirring it. Or certain oxidizing agents like potash can be used to remove impurities.

With the air still excluded, the purified phosphorus can be sealed in steel drums or even in tank cars and shipped to the chemical plants which turn the element into any of the many uses just described.

Streamlined Highways Urged by Road Experts

Washington.—A chorus of pleas for streamlining America's highways was voiced here at sessions of the highway research board of the National Research Council.

America's 15,000,000 pleasure-bound drivers, and the 9,000,000 others who make their living on the road, deserve and need highways that are safe and relaxing, it was stated generally at the session of the joint committee on roadside development.

Telephone poles, unsightly ditches, narrow shoulders, bare slopes attacked by erosion that endangers the road itself were all thoroughly criticized by leading highway engineers from every part of the United States.

Pointing to a photographic exhibition of the type of work that has been done and to what can be further done, H. J. Neale, chairman of the committee, asserted that these modern streamlined highways will prove cheaper in the long run.

"I don't know whether they will be 20 per cent or 80 per cent cheaper because we haven't got suitable figures yet," he declared, "but highways whose sides and shoulders are properly designed cost considerably less for maintenance once the road is built."

Wide shoulders—to allow cars to park well off the road and to remove the hazard represented by the ditch; wayside rests—to allow the fatigued driver a chance to relax; slopes planted with grass and shrubs—to prevent erosion from carrying earth and rocks down on to a road cut through a hillside or to prevent erosion from undercutting the bed of a road raised above the countryside, were among the things urged on the board by speakers.

The old type of road with its unsightly ditches is expensive to maintain, Mr. Neale further declared. Erosion from bare slopes fills the ditches. "It costs money to clear them," he pointed out. In addition ditches are dangerous to the automobilist.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

A French Heading for Your Draperies.

WHETHER you line your new draperies or not will depend on how heavy the material is. It is important, however, that the top of draperies be stiffened when a French heading is used. A soft canvas which may be purchased in drapery departments is generally used for this purpose. From four to six inches is a good depth to cut the heading canvas. Turn the top of the curtain material over it and sew as at A.

Start to sew the plait about an inch down from the top of the drapery and sew it the depth of the stiffening, as shown here at B. Pinch this plait into three small plaits and, starting two inches down from the top, sew through as at C. Sew these plaits the depth of the stiffening, so that they appear as shown here at D. Now turn to the wrong side and sew a ring to the back of each plait as at E.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; restoring and upholstering chairs, couches; making curtains for every type of room and purpose. Making lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents, to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Illinois.

Today's Trust

THIS day is before me. The circumstances of this day are my environment; they are the material out of which, by means of my brain, I have to live and be happy, and to refrain from causing unhappiness in other people. It is the business of my brain to make use of this material. Not tomorrow! Not next year! But now!

Today, exactly as today is! the facts of today, which, in my unregeneracy, I regarded primarily as anxieties, nuisances, impediments, I now regard as so much raw material from which my brain has to weave a tissue of life that is comely.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Unrolling Tape.—Scoring the sides of friction tape with an old razor blade, or sharp pocket knife will enable you to unroll it without tearing the edges.

Grouping Furniture.—Groupings of furniture, including pictures and lamps, should generally balance each other in height, width and effect of lightness or heaviness, housing experts say.

Don't Burn the Cake.—Set an alarm clock to go off at the time when cakes, and roasts, are due to be finished. It can be heard all over the house and acts as a reminder to the busy housewife who, intent on another job, may have forgotten the time.

Washing Walls.—When washing dirty painted walls with soapy water containing a cleaning powder, the job is made easier if a little flour is added to the water to make a paste. The paste will hold the mixture to the wall long enough for the powder to dissolve the dirt.

Thread Needle This Way.—Always thread the end of cotton broken off the reel into the needle, not the loose end, and it will never knot. When using double thread knot the two ends separately—this prevents any tiresome twisting and knotting.

Growing House Plants.—When soil in which house plants are potted becomes more like clay than loam it may be lightened by adding sand to it. Plants grow best in this kind of soil.

Non-Skid Clocks.—When an ornament or clock slips on a polished mantelpiece or sideboard, try cutting four small squares of felt from an old hat and sticking one to each corner of the base of the article. It doesn't show and it's quite "non-skid."

Prune Salad.—Cook some large prunes, one for each person. Slice and stuff with cream cheese which has been softened with a little milk. Let the stuffed prunes set for half an hour. Take one or two large lettuce leaves and arrange orange on the round and place on lettuce, and in the center of orange place a stuffed prune. Serve with mayonnaise dressing on each plate. PIONEER STORIES OF IOWA'S WILDLIFE WANTED BY SCOTT

Old settlers of Iowa! Do you have records or memories of the time when wolves howled around cabin doors and buffalo grazed over the prairie; when passenger pigeons blotted out the sun in their great flights; when the turkey for Thanksgiving dinner could be brought down out of a tree with a gun?

If so, get in touch with Thomas G. Scott, wildlife specialist, Iowa State College, Ames, and tell him about them.

Some of the animals reported to have been present in Iowa at one time or another, include: Panther, Canada lynx, buffalo, wild cat, elk, otter, fisher, marten, timber wolf, wild turkey and passenger pigeon.

SERVICES FOR MRS. KARNA HULL TO BE HELD FRIDAY

Funeral services, in charge of Arthur Wellemeyer, Funeral Director, will be held for Mrs. Karna Hull at 2:00 p. m. Friday at the U. B. Church at Goodell, Dr. W. E. Dr. and Rev. Harry L. Herlein officiating.

Mrs. Hull will be carried to her last resting place in the Goodell cemetery by her former school mates; Verner Priebe, Bernard Pringnitz, Howard Dominy, Gerald Burk, Ira Langlitz and Arthur Pringnitz.

Obituary

Karna Peterson was born Sept. 16, 1913 in Twin Lake township, the oldest of eleven children born to her parents, Peter Peterson and his wife, Laura Christie.

Karna attended the Klemme High School and graduated with the class of 1931.

On August 26, 1936 she was married to Russell Hull. This young couple commenced housekeeping on a farm in Twin Lake township and at present lived on the Gus O'Krueg farm.

About two weeks ago their home was gladdened by the birth of a daughter, Valeta Jeanette, by Caesarian operation at the Hammon hospital, but the home has now been saddened by the passing of the mother. Mrs. Hull was about ready to leave the hospital, when suddenly a Cardiac Embolism ended her life.

She had reached the age of 24 years, 4 months and 16 days.

She leaves of her immediate family, her husband, Russell Hull; her daughter, Valeta Jeanette; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Peterson; her brothers and sisters, Barbara, Lauretz, Clara Mae, Evelyn, John, Elaine, Christie, Lula and Norman; besides other relatives and friends.

The Way To National Progress

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman

Sentinel of the Republic

Recent news dispatches from Washington contain numerous promises that the "little fellows" in industrial and other activities are going to be consulted in current endeavors to clear the roadway toward sound recovery.

By this is meant that the average merchant or small producer and employer will have a chance to tell his story, and outline his needs to the men who make and enforce the laws which control our well-being as a nation.

It's an excellent idea, which all Americans who feel a sincere concern with our national progress will approve. It could, with real benefit, be carried still further. It could, with real benefit, extend to all types of workers and producers, who compose the body and strength of our Republic.

Washington might, for example, consider the problem of the average wage-earner, who feels the toll that heavy taxes—direct and indirect—levy on the contents of his pay envelope.

It might, for example, consider the worries of the average insurance policyholder or other prudent saver, who wonders what effect huge public debts—with their constant threat of inflation—may have on the thoughtful provisions he makes for the future security of his family.

It might, for example, consider the situation of the housewife, struggling to provide balanced meals on a family budget constantly unbalanced by rising prices due to public extravagance and impractical economic experiments.

These are the people to consider, rather than the blatant pressure groups or the expert fishers for votes, whose voices appear so often to drown out the modest demands of the average worker and earner.

Yet it is on these average citizens that the strength and stability of America depend—today as in the past. They represent not only the thews and sinews of our country, but its hopes as well. It is they who built America and will carry it to still greater heights—if given a chance.

They are, moreover, the real voice of the Nation—and if Washington only hears that voice, America cannot fail to resume her progress.

FORMER KLEMMME BOY MARRIED IN LOS ANGELES

Cards have been received by friends here announcing the marriage of Mr. Donald L. Stille and Miss Virginia W. Ricketts, both of Los Angeles, on Thursday, January 20th, 1938.

The service was read by the pastor of the United Presbyterian Church.

They started housekeeping immediately in a cozy apartment which Mr. Stille had in readiness for his bride, at 1217 W. Olympic Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif and will make plans for a trip to visit friends in Iowa at some future and more convenient date.

Mr. Stille is well known here as he lived in Klemme and vicinity nearly all of his life. He is a graduate of the Garner High School, also of the Molar Barber College at Los Angeles.

He did barbering for a short time and then accepted a position with the Los Angeles R. R. Co. and is now a full fledged street car operator and able to work either end (motorman or conductor) or as an operator on all types of cars but says he likes the new one man cars best as the new, up-to-date equipment makes them so easy to operate.

Mrs. Stille is a stranger to all of us. She is a business girl and, we are told, a very charming person.

Klemme Homes Are Insulated

The Northern Lumber Company has completed an insulation job at the home of Lloyd Lau. "Zonolite" was used on the job.

Earlier in the fall Dr. Dulmes had his place insulated with Palco Wool, an insulation sold by the Northern.

Paul Grange, manager of the Northern Lumber Company, says that quite a number of home owners are planning to use insulation. The material is inexpensive and soon pays for itself in fuel saved. Insulation also makes houses cooler in summer.

Stage Set For Annual County Basket Ball Tourney At Garner

SHAMROCKS DRAW HAYFIELD FOR FIRST GAME IN COUNTY TOURNAMENT

The Hancock County Basketball Tournament will get under way at Garner on Thursday evening, February 10th when two games will be played.

At 7:30 Klemme meets Hayfield and at 8:30 Garner plays Corwith. The winner of the Klemme-Hayfield game plays Britt Friday evening at 8:00.

Goodell plays Crystal Lake Friday at 7:00 and the winner meets the winner of the Garner-Corwith fracas Saturday afternoon at 3:00.

Woden plays Kanawha at 9:00 Friday and the winner meets the winner of the Klemme-Hayfield-Britt game Saturday at 2:00.

The consolation game will be Saturday evening at 7:30 and the final championship battle at 8:30 p. m.

SHAMROCK CAGERS PLAY AT WODEN FRIDAY NIGHT

A Win There Will Assure Shamrocks Of Conference Trophy

The Klemme Shamrocks will play Woden there on Friday night in a double header basketball game, the first game getting under way at 7:30 o'clock.

Woden is in second place for conference honors having won six games and lost but two, while the Shamrocks are coasting along with eight straight wins for first place.

In an earlier season game the Shamrocks won both tilts from Woden on the Klemme floor. The varsity squad winning 36 to 26.

The Shamrocks have but one conference game left after the Woden tilt. On February 18 they play at Crystal Lake in the last scheduled game of the season. A win from Woden Friday night will give them undisputed Seven Eagles Championship regardless of whether or not they win at Crystal Lake.

GROUND HOG DAY CLOUDY; FAIR WEATHER AHEAD

Today, Wednesday, February 2, is marked "Groundhog Day" on many people's calendar and according to tradition if the Groundhog comes out of his hole and sees his shadow then there will be six weeks of cold, winter weather ahead.

But, in North Iowa at least, the day was cloudy so Mr. Groundhog did not see his shadow and so we can look for fair weather during the coming six weeks.

But don't bet on it!

Shamrocks Down Goodell In Double Header Game

HAYFIELD STAR JOINS KLEMMME SHAMROCKS

Cecil Katter, former star player on the Hayfield high school basketball team, is now enrolled as a student in the Junior class of the Klemme High School. Cecil was the outstanding player on the Hayfield team this season and is now working out in practice with the Shamrocks.

Ben Katter and family have moved to a farm near Klemme, from near Hayfield, and their son, Cecil, has chosen Klemme High School to continue his studies.

Klemme extends a cordial welcome to the Katter family.

Freak Pheasants Rescued From Storm By Henry Ward

During the blizzard last week, Henry Ward, farmer southeast of Klemme, rescued seven pheasants which were nearly frozen to death in the storm. Mr. Ward put the birds in a warm place in his barn. Two of the hens were freaks. One was without a bill and had a mouth and nostrils very much like a rabbit, while the other had the markings around the neck and breast of a pheasant rooster.

Mr. Ward says that the storm killed quite a number of birds and that he found a number that were frozen to death.

Farm Bureau Ladies Held

Meeting At Aaron Stromer

Home February First

"Household Linens" is the cloth including the cloth used in the operation of the home. Table linen, towels and bedding, the source character preservation and care of linen were studied. Practical tests for judging the qualities of linen, and how to recognize linen were given. Miss Zollinger also gave the ladies many new quilt patterns. These are only a few of the things that the ladies of Liberty and E'l township studied at their leaders meeting which was at the home of Mrs. Aaron Stromer, Tuesday, Feb. 1st. There were 21 ladies present and a covered dish lunch was served at noon.

SHAMROCKS WIN DOUBLE HEADER FROM ANCIENT RIVALS THE PAST WEEK

Immense Crowd Sees Shamrocks And Goodell Battle At Garner Gym

A crowd that filled the Garner gym to overflowing saw the Klemme Shamrocks win two games from the fast Goodell quintets last Friday evening. The Little Shamrocks administered a good trouncing to their rivals when they defeated Goodell 14 to 5. The reserve boys played heads-up basketball and were at no time in danger.

Shamrocks Take 'Em Again

The first string game held plenty of thrills for the fans throughout the entire four frames. Goodell and Klemme each had a "cripple" playing on the squad and the game was more or less of a four-man team fracas as Latch of Goodell was nursing along a lame shoulder and Jorgenson of the Shamrocks was hobbling around with a badly sprained ankle which he sustained in the Belmond game.

The first quarter ended 12 to 11 in favor of Goodell, but from that point on the Shamrocks stepped into the lead and held a safe margin throughout the next three frames. The half ended 25 to 20 in favor of the Shamrocks and they stretched the third quarter into an 11 point lead with 33 points against Goodell's 22. The final whistle saw the Shamrocks out in front 39 to 31.

Trampel, Shamrock forward, surprised the fans with his sensational shooting and was the star on the Shamrock offense. Lau, Klemme guard kept things messed up in the back court but found time to wish one through the net. "One-Legged" Jorgenson gathered in 12 points to lead the Shamrock scoring. Schuldt played a fine game on both offense and defense and Grosshuesch was a constant threat and contributed to the scoring.

Kenny Boller was the outstanding player in the Goodell line-up and was truly a "thorn in the flesh" for the Shamrocks. Boller has a way of sliding around his guard that means just one thing: another basket for Goodell! Hofer was the spark plug in the Goodell line-up but had hard luck on his usually accurate shooting.

A feature that might be missed by some fans was the good percentage of gift shots made by the Shamrocks. out of 11 tries they made 7 count while Goodell made but 3 out of an even dozen.

Following is the box score of the varsity game:

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

THE day of the handsome hero with soulful eyes and long lashes is definitely over according to theater managers throughout the country. William Powell, Clark Gable, Paul Muni and Spencer Tracy are the current idols of audiences everywhere, and the most up and coming young actor is James Stewart.

Certainly if the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer story department continues to do as well by young Stewart as they have in "Navy Blue and Gold" he will soar to the very crest of the wave of success. Lanky and home-ly, Jimmy Stewart has naturalness and sincerity that endear him.

Almost every company has had a try at making a picture about midshipmen at Annapolis, and all of them have been pretty stirring with their martial music, their Navy spirit, their campus romances. But Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have taken all the old ingredients and made them seem fresh.

When Mervyn Le Roy finishes the last picture under his contract with Warner Brothers and moves to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as a producer, he and Clark Gable will both start arguing with executives that they simply must make a picture together. Clark has not forgotten how hard Le Roy tried to give him a start in pictures years ago.

When Clark was a stage actor and trying to get into pictures, Le Roy recommended him to Warner Brothers. He asked only $250 a week, but Warners thought that was too much for a guy with such big ears. Now they would gladly pay that much just to get one of his ears in a picture!

Nowadays Shirley Temple rarely stumps around the Twentieth Century-Fox lot visiting sets where pictures are being made. She stays in her dressing room bungalow and strange are the sounds that come out of there. It seems that Alan Dwan who is to direct her next picture thought it would be very cute for Shirley to beat a drum, so he assigned her a whole set of trap drums and hired a teacher to give her lessons. No one, least of all Mr. Dwan, realized that Shirley would take to drumming with such enthusiasm.

Studying box-office reports for the past few months, R-K-O have decided not to renew the contracts of Lily Pons and Nino Martini. Too hard to find stories for singers. Paramount has notified Marlene Dietrich that she can make pictures elsewhere; they are in no hurry to make another with her. Joan Blondell has decided she would rather re-lance than stay with Warner Brothers; and Rosalind Russell has decided to go back to the stage when her contract expires next summer.

Warner Brothers made such a hit with "Alcatraz," that they are filming a whole series of prison stories. Next you will see "Girls on Probation," then "Reform School," then one by Warden Lawes of Sing Sing called "Chalked Out." "Chalked Out" is prison slang for execution.

Among new air shows of 1938 is the return to radio of Bob Becker, nationally known sportsman, author, hunter and authority on dogs who broadcasts each Sunday in the interest of a popular brand of dog food. He is heard over NBC's red network coast-to-coast at 2 p. m. with a re-broadcast over WGN of the Mutual network at 2:45. Becker knows the woods and waters of North and South America as few men do. He has hunted bear, moose, and sheep in Alaska and made explorations in the little-known reaches of the Amazon.

ODDS AND ENDS—Connie Boswell will be on the Paul Whiteman program again on January 28th. . . . Robert Taylor asked to have Virginia Bruce play opposite him in "Northwest Passage" because she was leading woman in his first big screen success, and he counts on her to bring him luck. . . . Ted Husing, ace sports director, has entered a knitting contest in New York and defies anyone to make a crack about it. . . . When Grace Moore, Gladys Swarthout and many other famous singers attended a business meeting of the Metropolitan Opera Singers association, they insisted on calling a recess so as to listen to a Charlie McCarthy broadcast. . . . Edward G. Robinson and Jean Hersholt are transporting their whole radio program overseas to New York for a few weeks. . . . Hersholt will be the guest of Lauritz Melchior, Metropolitan opera singer and pianist, while he is in the metropolis. . . . Western Newspaper Union.

Modern Bridge of Sighs for China

Reflections of the invading Japanese soldiers stand out clearly in the placid water below as they march across a picturesque bridge in North China. Cogs in an inexorable war machine that is rolling juggernaut-like across China, these fighting men might be mistaken in the distance for peaceful workers homeward bound.

SKATING CHAMPION

A graceful picture of Miss Cecilia Colledge, brilliant young English skater who holds the world's women's figure-skating title, shown at St. Moritz, Switzerland, as she prepared for an international meet in which champions from many countries participated.

A Kiss for Carter Glass

Sen. Carter Glass of Virginia, oldest member of the upper house of congress, shown being kissed by his niece, Miss Nancy Carter Boatwright, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday recently. The elderly statesman insisted on attending the sessions of the senate on his birthday in spite of doctor's orders to the contrary.

Octogenarian Bishop at Play

Although he is eighty years old, Rt. Rev. Arthur F. W. Ingram, bishop of London, England, just refuses to feel old. The bishop is shown here (right) as he took part in the annual hockey game for the old Malburnians against Radley college in the grounds of Fulham palace recently.

ODD POWDER PUFF

You can't beat nature. Miss Barbara Bronner, one of the many visitors to the recent New York poultry show, utilizes the crest sported by this white crested drake as a powder puff. She says it's softer than the kind you buy at the store.

German Liner Lands High and Dry

Like a huge fish out of water, the German steamer Manissa is shown shortly after running aground on the shore of the Mediterranean near Adalia, Turkey. Fog and a heavy sea threw the ship off its course and landed it on shore.

A Lift Toward Spring

GOOD frocks and true are these currently exhibited by your favorite designers, Sew-Your-Own. There's an ultra-polished model for informal evenings (dancing and that sort of thing), called the "Good-night frock." Then there's the more home-loving "Good-morning" number, and, to complete the trio, a swell little afternoon frock for tea-time goings-on. Why not spend happy days ahead in these very frocks? All you need do, you know, is to Sew, Sew, Sew-Your-Own!

Spring Frock.

The girl who has a flare for streamlining will see at once that the frock at the left is meant for her—just for her. She will make it of satin if she's thinking ahead to Spring; of wool if her mind is on the present or near future. She will puff the sleeves gently, give the girdle tie a fair but firm snug-ging-up, adjust the chic cowl neck—and she'll be something lovely to look at. Yes, Milady, this is the "Good-night frock" and if it's the last thing you do, you must add it in your new wardrobe.

To Start the Day.

When you greet the little family with that bright and cheery "Good morning," be sure your frock reflects an equally sweet note. Sew-Your-Own's most assuring number to this end is pictured above center. With a copy or two in gay gingham or seersucker you'll breeze through your day's work like nobody's business. The shirt-waist styling offers style and comfort that make this your best bet for early season's wear.

A Go-Gittin' Style.

And for a charming "Good afternoon," choose a frock with plenty on the personality side. Such is the new young model at the right. Buttons in a line down the front tell you in so many dots and dashes that here you have "go-gittin'" style, for Spring, 1938. Princess lines cared for fastidiously by a belt, and a collar with much of what it takes—these are things that prompt Sew-Your-Own to put this frock in its Fashion-First Review for the Spring season. Make your version soon, Milady. That invitation to tea will find you unafraid and eager to go.

Pattern 1410 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, plus ¾ of a yard contrast for trimming sash as pictured.

Pattern 1438 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4¼ yards of 35-inch material.

THE KICKER

I hate to be a kicker. I always long for peace,
But the wheel that does the squeaking is the one that gets the grease
It's nice to be a peaceful soul, and not too hard to please.
But the dog that's always scratching is the one that has the fleas
The art of soft soap spreading is a thing that palls and stales,
But the guy who wields the hammer is the one who drives the nails.
Let us not put any notions that are harmful in your head,
But the baby that keeps yelling is the baby that gets fed

Bird's Driving Force Is Due to Downward Stroke

The driving force which propels a bird through the air is entirely due to the downward stroke of its wings, according to Naturalist S. F. Aaron, writing in Scientific American. Aaron further states that the feathers of a bird's wing remain tightly closed on the down stroke, but spread slightly on the up-stroke, thus permitting the wing to be raised without much resistance.

As Aaron describes the curious mechanism of wing structure that makes this possible, each of the large "flight feathers" turns or pivots on its individual quill, much as the shutters on a blind may be turned. The quills of these feathers are not in the middle, but nearer the forward side. On the up-stroke these pivot automatically in their socket, allowing the wing to recover its stroke upward through the air without tending so much to retard the bird's progress. But the feathers cannot pivot thus on the down-stroke because the broad rear edge of one feather is held against the front edge of the next.

Old Age Simply Mass of Bad Habits, So Cheer Up

They used to say that a woman is as old as she looks and a man is as old as he feels. I believe they are both as old as they think. You are old if you don't realize that your subconscious Old Nick is tempting you all the time. You are youthful if you are aware of the danger, writes Gelett Burgess in Cosmopolitan.

The world is cruel; it ridicules you and rejoices in your slightest imperfection. And all the time, remember, wherever you go, someone is looking at you.

So what? Old age is simply a mass of bad habits. You may not be able to keep your teeth from decaying or your hair from getting thin, but if you keep your zest for today and pull up your weeds and plant the roses of youth, if you know just what you are doing all the time, there's no reason why you shouldn't make yourself every day a little more youthful than yesterday.

The most significant characteristic of youth is growth. When you stop growing you begin to grow old. Of course you can't expect to keep on growing forever physically, but you can keep on growing mentally. And that means youthfulness. It is only by continual mental development and discipline that Age can ever hope to compete with Youth.

Camels Imported to U. S. for Cross-Country Work

This country imported two shiploads of camels—75 in all—from Egypt and Asia Minor, for cross-country communication. It was during Pierce's administration. The experiment was in charge of the War department and Jefferson Davis, secretary of war, was one of the most ardent advocates of the scheme, states a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The camels were landed at Indianola on the coast of Texas. Greek and Turkish camel drivers were also brought along to drive them.

The camels seemed well fitted for work in that region, and on one expedition they crossed Texas, New Mexico and Arizona to the Colorado, and their behavior was highly commended by the army officer in charge. But the experiment failed because of adverse public opinion and the outbreak of the Civil war.

The camels were sold to circuses and individuals, and many of them were turned loose.

Barnacles

Young barnacles are odd looking, very different in youth from the adult barnacle familiar to the sailor. And for a long time no one realized that this curious little creature was a young barnacle. It was named a "nauplius." It is only after the nauplius attaches itself to a rock or some board with its long feelers, that it develops a double shell for its protection. From time to time, the new shell sections are added to its "roof" until it generally has five compartments. Below the shell hang several pairs of long arm-like appendages which wave currents of water into the barnacle's mouth—and in the water hundreds of tiny creatures which are the barnacles' regular menu. Barnacles are commonest in warm seas, but there are countless numbers of them on sticks and stones in northern waters as well.

One of China's Capitals

Sian was one of the first of the eighteen capitals of China, the one which first united the whole country. Ambassadors from Persia and distant Turkey knelt before the Dragon Throne in Sian. Christian missionaries established a cathedral here twelve centuries ago. In Sian was developed the culture which influenced the rest of China to adopt tea for the national beverage Sian's civilizing effect spread to Japan, with the result that the Japanese adopted and use Chinese characters in writing and drink tea. Many Japanese wear the kimono, a variation of an ancient Chinese style which has been abandoned in the country of its origin.

The "Wailing Place"

The "wailing place," also termed occasionally the "wailing wall," specifically the Jews' Wailing Place says Literary Digest, is the usual designation of part of the Solomonic wall in Jerusalem where the Jews assemble to lament the destruction of the Temple. The Quarterly Review (London) contained: "To the Jews the principal Holy Place is the Wailing Wall, the fragment of the Wall of the Temple at which the Jews perpetually mourn for their lost glories, and pray for the restoration of them."

The Name "Hiawatha"

Hiawatha is a name and a title of a chieftainship hereditary in the Tortoise clan of the Mohawk tribe; it is the second on the roll of federal chieftainships of the Iroquois confederation. The first known person to bear the name was a noted reformer, statesman, legislator and magician, justly celebrated as one of the founders of the League of the Iroquois, the Confederation of Five Nations. Tradition makes him a prophet also.

Steel

Is Stronger Than STRING

When you are choosing a Living Room Suite... look at the construction. Are the springs held together with strings and webbing? Is it the old-fashioned "burlap construction?"

PERMALUX All-Steel Spring Suspension is securely anchored to strong "floating" STEEL BANDS.

There is NO string or webbing to wear out and break down in PERMALUX. Seats cannot sag. Entirely sanitary. GUARANTEED to outlast the upholstery and frame.

PERMALUX SUITES are a revelation in rich luxury, yet cost no more than cheaply constructed suites. See our 1938 models now on our floor.

1937 Illinois Corn Performance Test Results rove "All Around" Ability of

PIONEER

The Quality Hybrid Seed Corn

THE results of the 1937 Illinois Corn Performance Tests, conducted by the Illinois Agricultural Experiment Station, Urbana, Ill., Bulletin No. 440—again prove e "all-around" ability of PIONEER—the Quality Hybrid ed Corn.

In the North Section Illinois Test (similar to North-entral Iowa)—PIONEER had 10 entries out of a total of
And five (5) PIONEER hybrids were among the top
No competitor had more than two places among the p 15.

And, as usual, PIONEER had a high General Performance Rating. It yielded high—it stood up well—it duced a corn of uniform quality and higher feeding lue.

In considering the results of the Official 1937 Illinois orn Performance Tests it is well to bear in mind that e PIONEER entries were not special "show-ring" hybrids but were the very same kind that corn growers are buy-g in quantity every day. Insist on buying your hybrid ed corn by number. Insist, also, upon knowing the recd behind it. For Sturdier Crops—Bigger Yields and EATER PROFITS—it pays to plant PIONEER—the ality Hybrid Seed Corn.

SCHOOL LIFE

The school life of a student takes up the best part of his life. And his high school days are the best ones. The student goes to his classes, and has a lot of fun with his school mates.

Some of his classes are very interesting, while other are dull.
Then there are times when the student feels lazy and sleepy. Other times he will have too much pep and get himself in trouble

The best part of school is the part that takes in sports. He gets lots of fun out of it and good exercise. Then there are times when an accident will ruin his pleasure.
All in all, it is a lot of fun.

Of course, the last year is the best year. Seniors have the pleasure of getting their pictures taken going on skip day, and lots of other things. As a whole, school is a lot of fun for the most of us.

—KHS—

Just in case you girls don't realize it we boys don't enjoy the smell of the finger nail polish you put on in school, better you should put it on at home.

—oOo—

The biggest treat the girls got this year was when they got a chance to go to Garner to show off their marching and looks to the Garner boys. Did any of you girls get results? Well, that's too bad.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES
In Business Training class Miss

Brakel brought to class a letter from Dun and Bradstreet which Mr Elstad received. Dun and Bradstreet is a large company which has records of stores to give companies concerning their business. It was very interesting.

We took our first ten minute speed test in typing class Wednesday.
La Rayne Stille had the highest rate. He made 34 words with only 3 errors

At the Klemme-Goodell game at Garner last Friday night the Klem-me girls went through some drills on the floor. They made the letters "K" and "G" and gave yells for both schools while in formation.
The girls wore green blouses with white skirts, the school colors

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Some seventeen or eighteen years ago when I was a staff writer for the Associated Press, specializing in finance, I was called upon to write the "lead" or general story about the annual estimates of expenditures sent to congress that day. The late L. C. Probert was my chief. He read my story and ordered me to rewrite the first paragraph, saying: "You ought to stress that total more; make it read something to the effect that 'billion dollar congress has arrived.' Show where these government expenditures are heading."

The circumstance impressed me for some reason. I can recall the incident as vividly as though it were yesterday: "The era of billion dollar congresses appears to be upon us" but it was one of those incidents that was just a good story to a writer. Little did I realize then what it would mean when viewed from the perspective, say, of 1938, for only the other day President Roosevelt submitted the annual estimates, now called the budget, for the next fiscal year. The call was for $6,869,043,000. That was not all. He said there likely would be additional requests for money later and he added a most significant expression or observation that probably we can expect the annual federal budget to run around seven billion dollars in the future.

In truth, where are these government expenses heading? And what do they mean in the lives of present and future citizens and taxpayers? What does it mean in taxation and especially when one considers that besides this list of scheduled expenditures, there is a little matter of thirty-eight billion dollars in national debt? Then, we ought to remember there has been a deficit for nine successive years—nine years during which the government has spent more than it received in income, and there probably will be at least one more.

As the figures were approved by the President and sent to the capitol, the government will spend $539,000,000 (its deficits) more during the fiscal year that starts next July 1 than taxes will bring into the treasury. That means, of course, more borrowing and more borrowing means an increase in the public debt. Onward and upward! Or should we say it in a revised form: upward—and upward!

Most of the newspapers made headlines out of several items because they were huge, immense. Attention was called to the fact that the appropriation for national defense—the army, the navy, the marine corps—was $991,000,000. That was the greatest peacetime total in history. They also referred at length to a billion dollar appropriation for relief, and to an item of $976,000,000 in interest on the public debt, and to $538,000,000 for pensions to veterans of wars.

These are startling in their size. They should occasion comment. Sometimes I think it requires staggering totals to cause people to stop and think a bit. Maybe these will do that. But in any event, the budget just submitted to me seems to carry some additional significance, matters that deserve more thought than the size of those items mentioned. I refer to the general trend as exemplified by the President's remark that we may expect seven billion dollar budgets in the future.

As to that indication, is it not about time to call a halt? Throughout the nearly twelve hundred pages of figures in the budget, as printed, everywhere one can point to new items or expansion of old ones. When I say new items, I refer to expenditures that have come along in the last six or eight years. Scores of them have bobbed up in the last four or five years in the great war on the depression; others have just bobbed up.

I prefer, therefore, to call attention to these scads of little items that, like so many holes in a tank, are allowing public money to flow away without trace or benefit. That is why I think there should be a good deal of attention paid to the general heading in the budget "independent units." Because, tucked away in the list is where the dangers lie.

The total for the independent units of the federal government is in excess of $1,825,000,000. Each of the various agencies therein has its "necessary" expenditures to keep going, and a good many of them, about half a dozen, certainly have their value to the country as a whole. But the new children in that family are growing up. They are funny looking children in some cases. What they will grow out to be, their proud parents surely cannot forecast. Who knows whether they will develop their own clan and become rooted as a permanent drain on the taxpayers. Unless history is changed, quite a number of them will have children of their own in the shape of new bureaus and new duties as the politicians find new ways of spending money.

It is made to appear that we cannot avoid such expenditures as those for national defense, those for veterans who have served their country well, those in payment of interest on a debt that ought not to be so great. There is not much chance, therefore, to effect economy in that direction. Thus, it seems that if the President is sincere about reducing government expenditures and if the politicians in congress have any courage, they had better start looking at the children that are growing up. I mean the children of older government agencies as well as the new children whose parents are politicians.

In this connection, let us advert to that budget mentioned at the opening of this discussion. The Department of Commerce that year was getting something like seven million dollars, as I recall. In this year's budget the appropriation is for $44,710,000.

Now, I assume some one will point out that the functions of the Department of Commerce have expanded immeasurably. That is true. The development of aviation has added many millions to the required expenditure of that government agency. In other words, the federal government has to meet new conditions just like its citizens must meet new conditions. But the point I am trying to make is this: there are enough of those necessary expenditures, outgo that cannot be avoided because they represent real governmental functions, without adding a lot of trick schemes, visionary ideas, theoretical possibilities to the functions of the federal government. There is not space here to list them, but every one of the older agencies has been guilty of biting off new appropriations through the medium of a new child or two or three of its own every few years. I am not suggesting, therefore, that those established agencies, those that have proved necessary, are to be cut out. I am only proposing they be restricted.

I have authority, too, for terming many of these expenditures waste.

The authority is the comptroller general of the United States. The comptroller general sent his annual report to congress recently. In it he charged there had been wanton waste of government money by most of the federal agencies. He did not charge dishonesty—just something like weak minds in the way they planned and spent and did not keep books to show exactly what had happened.

The comptroller general, R. N. Elliott, told congress that there was a regular campaign going on among what is usually called the spending agencies of the government to get control of their spending without checkups by the general accounting office. There are continued efforts, he said, "to secure for spending agencies legislation making further surrender by the legislative branch (congress) of its right and authority to direct by law the use of public funds." Of course, Mr. Elliott made no reference to the President's repeated demands of congress for what is called "blank check" appropriations. There were few persons, however, who failed to connect the two. The report singled out the Department of Justice, the War and Navy departments and a whole flock of the independent children as agencies that are getting out of line in keeping track of what they do with their appropriations.

From these facts, it may be apparent to every one that a real need exists for a tight grip by congress on appropriations and an absolute cessation of the great game of starting new agencies.

And here is a story about one teeny, weeny item of government expenditures. It is a story that seems to belie the discussion above about waste by the government agencies. The fact is that the story shows how niggardly the government is in some instances when we all know how wanton waste and recklessness characterize larger spending.

Brig. Gen. Harold C. Reisinger, of the marine corps, is being court-martialed on a charge that he "padded" his personal expense account by $77.35. That is to say the general may be dishonorably discharged after a useful life and perhaps even jailed because the claim is made that he did not spend as much money as his voucher showed.

The point of this story, however, does not involve General Reisinger at all. It was by mere coincidence that his trial started as it did during the closing days of the extra session of congress—that session, you will recall, that met November 15 and adjourned December 22 without having passed a single major piece of legislation. The legislation acted on favorably by that session included passage of one appropriation bill. It appropriated $225,000 to be paid to representatives and senators at "mileage."

Aviation Beckons New Enthusiasts Following 34 Years of Pioneering

Chicago Display to Show
How New Planes Run
'Like an Auto'

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

A great silver bird darts through the skies. Looking upward, we can hardly believe that the history of this graceful creature encompasses less than half a lifetime. Only 34 years ago at wind-swept Kill Devil Hill, North Carolina, Wilbur and Orville Wright first raised their patchwork "flying machine" into the air.

Few people notice the 60-foot granite shaft that now marks the site of this historic flight, but equally few are the people who remain unconscious of aviation's growing place in our national—aye, international—life. The year 1937 was so important to aviation, and 1938 promises to be so much more so, that Chicago is fittingly staging its first great International Air exposition January 28 to February 6.

Into the vast International amphitheater at the stockyards, site of the annual International Livestock show, will be packed the airplanes and equipment that have made recent aviation history, together with those whose epochal achievements are still in the future. The visitor with an adventurous glint in his eye will be unable to view this imposing array of speed and power without reflecting on America's aerial progress.

The Oceanic Future.

He will think first, probably, of the transoceanic possibilities of aviation, a field first brought into the public eye by Chairman Joseph P. Kennedy of the United States maritime commission. In November in his far-sighted official suggested that American steamship companies add flying boats to their fleets and warned that not to do so "might prove quite short-sighted."

Mr. Kennedy is right, because regular scheduled air service between London and New York will probably start this year. Within three years a fleet of huge transports capable of carrying 100 passengers from New York to Europe will be in service.

So much for ocean aircraft. On land, commercial aviation has taken so many rapid strides that many cities are finding their airport facilities crowded. Chicago, Washington, Los Angeles and New York are a few of the centers forced to expand their landing space to accommodate the larger craft.

America's fighting air force is now the best in the world, equipped with four new types of war craft including the XB-15, called the world's biggest bomber. It also has the "Airacuda," a new fighting ship believed the only plane capable of carrying the super-bomber single-handed. In the pursuit field the new Seversky is the fastest combat plane in the world. The army's most important advance has been first cars were simply horseless carriages, the whole purpose being a motor that would propel a buggy by the explosions of a gasoline engine. The modern automobile body and comfort came later.

Similarly, the first airplanes were simply aimed to defy gravitation and fly. Later man set about to make flying simple, comfortable and safe. The Chicago show will illustrate completely and fundamentally how well he has succeeded.

To begin with, man now does his flying indoors. Just as the "open car" has almost disappeared from the automobile trade, so have cabins become almost universal in the airplane industry. Even the lowest-priced craft now have such refinements as upholstery and heaters.

Since aviation enthusiasts want to operate their own ships, flying is being simplified to the "nth" degree. And since most Americans know how to operate an automobile, the trend is to make airplanes as much like motor cars as possible. Instead of sitting in front of the pilot as in the early planes, the modern passenger sits beside his driver as in a coupe. And conversation is easy as it is cheap.

Controls Simplified.

The parallel continues in the controls. Many new planes now have steering wheels and at least one manufacturer has placed the gas control on a foot pedal like an automobile accelerator.

Another device, not entirely new but made standard or optional equipment on many more planes in 1938, is the tricycle landing gear. This device, with the standard two wheels supplemented by a third forward wheel, permits the plane to move forward on the ground in the natural level position of an automobile until it has attained enough speed for the takeoff.

And, although the mechanism still compares with that of the automobile, there are some new planes on which automobile tires have been replaced with web feet! The reference is to seaplanes and amphibious ships, rapidly growing in popularity among private pilots.

amphibious plane, the remote attractive lake or stream is but an hour or two away.

How to Hunt Coyotes!

These private craft have very practicable uses, too. In North Dakota a rancher found his plane invaluable in ridding his property of coyotes, which thrive in that locality and are a constant menace to sheep and young livestock. Armed with a shotgun, he killed scores of the marauders from the air.

Another private pilot took his seaplane on his trip to the North Cape last summer and used it to explore the famous Norwegian fjords. He had a view of that wonderful scenery from points inaccessible to any steamer.

But the greatest number of ships are used for the personal pleasure of their owners or to earn a livelihood in transporting men and goods for hire, in sightseeing flights and in the important work of training more flyers.

A. S. Aslakson, sheep rancher of Shewen, N. D., carries a shotgun in his plane and wages relentless war from the air on coyotes which raid his flocks.

Another important market is the corporate field, where large business firms are finding it both convenient and economical to own their own ships. Thus busy executives can arrange their own timetables on long trips. Craft used in this service range from modest two or four passenger jobs to full-size airliners with specially constructed bodies, allowing conference and work rooms for executives while they are in the air.

These are among the more prominent phases of this phenomenal industry to be explained at the Chicago show.

Airlines Participate.

Four lines—American, United, TWA and Pan-American—are co-operating in the exhibition of a giant Douglas transport sleeper. Specially constructed cat-walks will enable visitors to examine the big ship inside and out at close range. In addition, individual airlines are exhibiting equipment promoting safety and regularity of air transport.

A large section of the exhibition floor will hold government aerial displays. The army is sending a P-36 pursuit ship, the navy will send a Grumman bomber and the coast guard will show how it saves lives at sea through aerial work. The bureau of air commerce has prepared special safety exhibits. The Langley field wind-tunnel and spinning tunnel will be shown in miniature.

These are the things that Orville Wright (Wilbur died in 1912) has lived to see develop from the crude—though scientific—beginning at Kitty Hawk. A fitting addition to the Chicago exhibition would be the historic craft that started a transportation revolution on December 17, 1903. Strange, indeed, is the fact that this plane instead rests in South Kensington museum at London, sent away from the land of its creation and achievement through a tiff with officials of the Smithsonian institution at Washington.

Lesson for January 30

MINISTERING TO SPIRITUAL NEEDS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 2:1-12.
GOLDEN TEXT—Son, thy sins are forgiven—Mark 2:5.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When the House Was Crowded.
UNIFORM TOPIC—Who Can Forgive Sin?
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Blessing People to Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christianity's Concern for Spiritual Health.

Man is so constantly concerned with his physical nature, the needs and interests of his body, that he is prone to forget that there is within him a spiritual nature which is in fact his real self. The body which is the temporary dwelling place of the soul is most important—but relatively it is of but slight significance when considered alongside of the spiritual life of man.

Our lesson presents the Lord Jesus as being rightly concerned with the needs of the palsied man's body, but his act of healing was incidental to the infinitely more important act of forgiving his sins. Consider him, for his was indeed

I. A Hopeless Case (v. 3).

Incurably afflicted and helpless physically, but far more deeply afflicted spiritually was this poor man, for he was still in his sins. No man was able to heal his body, only God could heal his soul. He was indeed hopeless until he met Jesus. He knows no hopeless case. With God all things are possible, and Jesus Christ is God.

We are even as was this man, for without God we too are without hope (Eph. 2:12). Let us face the facts and admit that unless we are saved through Christ we are eternally and completely lost.

II. Impossible Conditions (vv. 1, 2, 4).

We say that the circumstances surrounding this man were such as to make it impossible for him to reach the Lord, for so they would have been apart from the spirit of divine urgency which impelled his helpers to cut through every excuse and brush aside every hindrance.

"Where there's a will there's a way." Had these men been controlled by convention they would never have put their friend at the feet of Jesus. But note that before taking up the roof they tried the door. They tried to use the proper entry, but it was blocked. It often is—sometimes by customs, sometimes by religious ceremony, often by vain philosophy.

III. Immediate Conversion (v. 5).

At once Jesus sees their faith and forgives the man his sins. God always welcomes and honors faith. Note that Jesus—who as God had the power to forgive sins—immediately cleansed him from all unrighteousness.

This man's affliction proved to be his greatest blessing. If he had not had the palsy he might never have met the Lord. Suffering properly borne may be a means of grace.

IV. Secret Criticism (vv. 6, 7).

What a serious thought it is that the unspoken word which we think we have hidden away in the heart or mind is known to God. "All things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do" (Heb. 4:13). "There is nothing hid that shall not be known" (Luke 12:2). What does the Lord see when he looks into your heart and mine?

Their theology was faultless—their reasoning was logical, but their premise was wrong. They were right in saying that only God could forgive sin. But they were wrong in assuming that Jesus was not God, and therefore a blasphemer.

V. Miraculous Confirmation (vv. 8-12).

Forgiving sins was harder than healing the body, but these enemies of Jesus lived so much in the realm of the physical that they missed that important truth. He meets the challenge of their unbelief by going into their own limited field of observation. They were not able to test the effectiveness of His forgiveness of sins. They did not believe in Him, hence they would not receive it by faith.

Let us remember that the incident took place in the early days of our Lord's ministry. While we do not condone their hostility to the tender and loving service of our Lord to humanity, we can understand their slowness to accept his claims to divine power. In our day we have no such excuse, for all gospel history is available to us. God help us that we may not sit in the seat of the scornful and "demand a sign" before we will believe.

Our Anxiety

HAVE we found that anxiety about possible consequences increased the clearness of our judgment, made us wiser and braver in meeting the present, and arming ourselves for the future? . . . If we had prayed for this day's bread, and left the next to itself, not allotting to each day its appointed task, but ever deferring that to the future, and drawing upon the future for its own troubles, which must be met when they come, we should have found simplicity and honesty in our lives, a capacity for work, an enjoyment in it.—F. with ships capable of fighting at great altitudes, in the sub-stratosphere.

But the big future field of American aviation—the field to be pressed at Chicago's air show—will be private planes for the butcher, baker and banker. The airplane is undeniably becoming more and more like an automobile!

It is as comfortable, as easy to drive, and as safe as the streamlined model produced by your favorite automobile manufacturer. And the airplane is now used by about 10,000 private owners and operators, having gone through all the growing pains that also characterized the "primitive" automobile.

Examining the "Parallel."

There is a striking parallel between the development of private and automobiles. The

For these craft almost any body of fairly smooth water is suitable for landing and taking off. More and more lakes are being explored in this new way by sportsmen pilots. Most manufacturers exhibiting small planes in the Chicago show are either adding seaplanes to their lines or making floats optional equipment.

Who are these private pilots, the men who fly to their lakeside cabins after work each summer evening, and the enthusiasts who live in the air every week-end? Are they American millionaires? By no means. While many rich men are flying enthusiasts, it is not true that most private flyers are millionaires. The cost of the private airplane now ranges upward from $1,000 and to many energetic Americans flying has become a hobby that beats golf. To the fisherman with a small

CANE FOR GAME

Near thickets, sloughs, creeks or dredge ditches where medium trees may occur, corn fodder with ears, or cane fodder with seed tops may be shocked around a tree for feeding game birds.

Select a tree at the south or east of the thicket or slough; a tree that has its lowest branches 6 to 10 feet above the ground. Stack the corn fodder or cane around the tree and tie a string or wire around the fodder and the tree, about one or two feet below the fodder tops. Spread out the fodder a foot or two from the base of the tree to arrange some shelter for the birds. They will be able to get the food easily.

Cane tops and even stalks of corn with ears may be tied into small bundles and hung from branches of trees and shrubs in thickets. Hang them low enough for the birds to reach, but high enough that they will not be covered with snow.

The Hope of the World

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

A prominent feature of world news during recent years has been the growing truculence, in voice and action, of the Fascist and Communist nations.

On many spots of our globe these twin enemies of democracy are disturbing the peace of the world.

For whose benefit? Their own people's? That's what the dictators proclaim, but the facts belie their statements. To the average man and woman such strife has brought only hardship.

For those under arms it has meant wounds and death. For those at home it has meant the discomfort and belittling that inevitably accompany war. To all it has brought conditions where reduced wages or compulsory labor, privation by edict, conviction without trial, and many of the other evils of tyranny are commonplace.

Yet through every available source the people now under totalitarian government are told that this relinquishment of human rights is for their benefit. By every means they are told that existence in chains is preferable to the free life of democracies. By every means they are told that such surrender of their freedom to worship as they choose, or to speak or write as they choose, or to exercise a voice in government, is to their advantage.

Unfortunately many men, once free, now accept these claims. Unfortunately some smaller nations within the shadow of the great dictatorships appear willing to listen, too. But the people of America and the other great democracies realize their falsity.

They know that when the people govern, wages are higher, and will buy more; the human spirit is freer, and will achieve more; peace is more certain and will prevail longer.

They know that democracy assures not only the greatest security, but the greatest well-being, for the average man and woman.

They know that democracy remains the hope of the world.

And so long as the democratic peoples remember these things, so long as they check false claims against actual evidence, neither the persuasions nor the sword rattling of the dictator nations will prevail against them.

Jacobs Hardware Store Is Rated As One Of Best

KLEMMME MERCHANT
GIVEN NATIONAL RECOG-NITION BY MAGAZINE

In the current issue of the Hardware Retailer, a national magazine, the E. F. Jacobs Hardware Store was given a story that covered three pages of the publication. A number of interior views of the store were shown and in the story Ed. Jacobs was cited as having one of the best small town hardware stores in the United States.

The story carried a history of the store, gave an accurate description of the interior arrangement and the stock carried and told how the Klemme Times ran a special feature edition on the opening of the new store and the Larsen Refrigerator Storage.

Mr. Jacobs can well feel proud of his store and the national recognition he has been given for building up a business of this kind in a small town.

KLEMMME CHOSEN AS SITE FOR SUB-COUNTY PLAY CONTESTS

Nearly all of the schools in the county are now working on one-act plays which will be entered in sub-county contests at a later date.

On March 9th Goodell, Garner and Klemme will present their plays at the Klemme auditorium. In the north part of the county Crystal Lake, Woden and Hayfield will compete in a sub-county contest, while Corwith, Kanawha and Britt will have their contests.

A final county contest will be held later in which the winning plays from each of the sub-county contests will again compete for first place honors.

Many of the schools are now holding one-act plays instead of declamatory contests. However, the declamatory contests may be held for those who desire to compete in the state rounds.

An American Point of View

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Washington, in response to popular insistence, seems recently to be lending a more attentive ear to the problems of the smaller employers and other average producers.

It has heard many protests, varied in nature. But prominent among them has been the demand for freedom to continue their labors without undue harassment and impractical interference from officialdom—however paternal in theory.

This demand may have amazed many politicians, but it didn't surprise the nation as a whole.

It was a typical American point of view, which office-holders who admire the European pattern seem to find difficult to understand. It was the point of view of our pioneer ancestors who carved America out of a wilderness, asking only the right to build their homes and their churches, to raise their families, and to perform their labors, without the intrusion of appointed bureaucrats and destructive tax burdens.

In America, the spirit of self-reliance expressed in that point of view still persists. It is our great national heritage. It should be preserved.

But it cannot be preserved by constant attacks on initiative and enterprise; by proud pointings to the doubtful economic experiments of a frightened Europe, by preachments that the politicians, rather than the people themselves, know best how to conduct the people's business.

It was the people, and not the politicians, who built America.

It is the people, and not the politicians, who know the work to be done, and are eager to continue it.

That is the principle on which our nation was founded, and on which it grew to greatness. It is the principle that Jefferson preached. It is the principle that the average man is trying to impress on Washington.

And when Washington listens to him, and returns sincerely to that fundamental principle, the gates which bar the pathway to recovery will be opened, and America can continue the progress which the strength, the energy and the intelligence of her people assure.

YOUNG COUPLE MARRIED WEDNESDAY WILL LIVE ON FARM EAST OF KLEMMME

Howard Baack And Alida Schubert
Wed At Reformed Church

Mr. Howard Baack, son of Mr. and Mrs. August Baack of Klemme, and Miss Alida Schubert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Schubert of Britt, were united in marriage at the Reformed Church in Klemme by Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 2. The double ring ceremony was used.

They were attended by Herbert Schubert, brother of the bride and Miss Ruth Sorenson, a close friend of the bride.

The bride was attired in a white satin dress with train and veil. The bridesmaid wore white with blue accessories. The bridegroom and best man wore oxford gray.

The ushers were Walter and Ewald Schubert, brothers of the bride. The pianist was Miss Ruth Ward of Wesley.

Norma and Lena Schubert, sisters of the bride, sang, "To Thee Our Father," and Walter Schubert sang, "O Promise Me."

A candle light dinner at 5:30 followed the wedding, where about sixty-five guests were present.

The table cloth and napkins that were used are the original ones used at the bride's mother's wedding. The house was decorated in blue and white.

The bride graduated from the Klemme High School with the class of 1935. She taught in Britt township.

The bridegroom graduated from the Klemme School with the class of 1934 and since has been at home.

The young couple left immediately after the dinner for New Ulm, Minnesota, for their wedding trip and after two weeks will return to Klemme and begin house-keeping on a farm near Klemme.

Pheasant Freaks of Nature

J. Z. Stevens, Clear Lake, state conservation officer is shown above holding two pheasant hens, the one on the left with markings like a cock and the other with a rabbit-like nose. Presumably the latter lost its beak in the cold weather a year ago, but seemingly eats and drinks without discomfort. The birds were found during the recent blizzard by Henry Ward, Klemme farmer, who turned them over to Stevens. Both birds were sent to the state farm near Boone for care and study. WALLET FINDER GIVES HIMSELF $5.00 REWARD

A week or so ago Clarence Kluckhohn, Jr. lost his billfold, which among other things contained a $5.00 bill of the large kind which he was saving as a souvenir, his driving license and other personal effects. Monday afternoon Clarence received a package in the mail which he opened and found to be his billfold. . . minus the old five dollar bill and other money, but which contained his driver's license.

Evidently the finder considered he was entitled to the $5.00 reward, so kept the money and returned the billfold and other contents.

BULLETIN!

As the Times goes to press we learn that the villains have been hohn had found the wallet and con-hohn had found the wallet and confiscated the contents and mailed the package as a joke on Clarence. Clarence swears vengeance on the wayward prune peddlers!

SCHOOL HOUSE INSULATED BY LOCAL FIRM PAST WEEK

Jorgenson Home Insulated With Zonolite Last Week

Last week the Northern Lumber Company completed two insulating jobs. The Klemme School and the R. A. Jorgenson home were both insulated with Zonolite the past week.

Zonolite is easy to apply to old buildings, making them warmer and easier to heat in winter, and helping to keep them cool in the summer.

Paul Grange, manager of the Northern Lumber Company says he looks for a big business in insulation this coming year as the new type of insulating material makes it now practical to insulate old buildings at moderate cost.

SHAMROCKS LOSE FIRST CONFERENCE GAME IN NINE STARTS

Lose To Woden In Last Minute Thriller

Last Friday night in the Woden gym the Woden High School basketball team, led by Elvin Helm, diminutive forward flash, handed the Klemme Shamrocks their first conference defeat of the season by a score of 31 to 30.

Playing "heads-up" ball from the very beginning, the scrappy Woden five grabbed a lead in the opening minutes of play when Gerdes dribbled down the sidelines and poked one in from the corner. From then on until the fourth quarter the Shamrocks never headed the Woden quintet, but in the final period they staged a rally that netted them eleven points to put them out in front by a score of 31 to 29. Then, with only thirty seconds to play, Helm took a pass on an out of bounds play, dribbled down the floor and flopped one in to make the final score read 31 to 30 in favor of Woden.

Jorgenson led the scoring for the evening when he rammed home six field goals and a pair of gift shots for fourteen points. Schuldt was good for nine points and Grosshuesch got four, while Trampel failed to score as he left the game via the foul route after having played only about a quarter.

Helm and Gerdes led the Woden five as they pushed through 12 and 10 points, respectively. And incidentally, this Gerdes is no slouch as a defense man.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The month of January, 1938, has come and it is now gone with the wind. Dozens of big business men have been called to the White House for conferences with the President on means of solving the depression problem. And dozens have gone away from the White House after those conferences without any announcement from the head of the government as to what is to be done. Much conversation and much noise—totaling much conversation and much noise. That was January at the White House.

A new session of congress started with the opening of January. The house and the senate appear actually to have no definite program; certainly, no program for a constructive course that will lead the country out of the terrific business decline. Instead, the senate has been debating and debating a bill to punish any community where a lynching takes place and the house has been indulging in its annual sport of passing appropriation bills, voting money without knowing too much about the items for which it votes. Southern senators filibustered against the anti-lynching bill because of the problems, the burdens, such legislation would load on them and the northern Democratic senators seemed willing to let business die, unemployment increase, etc., in order to gain a few negro votes. That was January in congress.

An analysis of the situation, therefore, would seem to be in order. To do that, we have to go back to 1933 when President Roosevelt took office. The nation was in chaos. There is no need to review those conditions. The new President came in with an overwhelming majority to support him. His majority was so large that he needed only to express his view and it was translated into action. The country liked the aggressiveness thus shown. Members of the house and senate, however, developed a habit—not all of them, but a majority of them. That habit was one of waiting for the word from the White House.

While this habit was growing, business interests were pushed and kicked around and generally given to understand that they did not know what the shooting was all about. Like a country school boy, the business man was sent to his seat and told to stay there. Otherwise the hickory stick would be brought into use. Indeed, the hickory stick in the form of several pieces of legislation was laid onto the business of the country, not as a pat on the back, but much further down toward the end of its spine. So business, too, got the habit of standing in the background. It was afraid to venture forth.

Things began to look up. There was something approximating good business and it looked as if Mr. Roosevelt's policies were correct in every sense. But something happened; the boat struck a snag.

For several months last year the administration refused to admit that conditions were alarming. It was just temporary, officials said. The country would pull out of it—and it will some time if there is anything left. But the problem is immediate and January has gone into history, as did December and November. It was in this circumstance that the results of the habit formed in 1933 began to show their worst phases. Business interests have gone to the White House to tell their side of the story, at the President's request, and nothing has come of those conferences.

In the criticism of congress, I did not intend to indict all of the membership. There are those who see their mistakes and are willing to do something about them. Unfortunately, they are in minority. Blind followers of the President, generally speaking, constitute the majority. So that those who want to take constructive action haven't had an opportunity.

Lately, I heard Worth Clark, a Democratic member of the house from Idaho, make a radio speech on this fact; or rather he touched on this fact. Mr. Clark is a pretty hard-boiled Democrat, but he believes he was elected to represent his people and not to throw them down simply because his party leadership wanted to do something else. In the radio speech that I mentioned, Mr. Clark referred to mistakes that had been made in the last five years and asked: "What is the remedy?"

"First," he continued in his answer to that question, "we must squarely face the problem. We must realize that we have done some things wrong. We must retrace our steps where necessary and start anew."

"One of the difficulties involved here is the lack of independence of thought and courage among us in congress. The worst injustice that can be done a great leader is to blindly follow his every suggestion. That frequently causes him to make more mistakes than he otherwise would."

A man's best friends are not those who crouch at his feet with blandishment, flattery and subservience. His real friends are those who disagree with him when they think him wrong and who give him their utmost in support when they think him right."

There are many others in congress who feel as does Mr. Clark about the present situation. They recognize, I think, that Mr. Roosevelt must assume his fair share of responsibility, as President, for the current depression. It is apparent, too, that he must assume responsibility for the failure of some of his policies in that he turned to "yes" men for advice instead of recognizing that there could be honest disagreement with him on the part of many who desired to be helpful. It is, in other words, another result of the type of leadership that he has assumed, a leadership that worked without halt when everything was hunky dory but a type that obviously will fail when the tide runs against you.

Perhaps I was a bit unfair when I said Mr. Roosevelt's conferences with business men had yielded nothing. It is true that he has "persuaded" the automobile manufacturers and finance companies to tighten up the strings somewhat on installment buying. It is likely that hereafter an automobile finance company will grant credit only for 18 months instead of 24 months on the sale of a car where deferred payments are used. I do not know how that will solve the current depression, but that was the reason given for the change in business practice. As a matter of fact, experts in the Department of Commerce said in published reports in May, 1937, that a majority of the finance companies were holding to the 18-month limit even then.

There can be no doubt that installment buying is a dangerous thing because of the abuses that accompany it. My objection to it is the same as I have often stated in these columns respecting other types of debt. Any time debt is made easy, there has been created a fresh danger at the very same time. Installment buying has been generally used and the general result is, as it was bound to be, that hundreds of thousands of people put themselves into debt. When their income from wages or otherwise was reduced, their installment obligations became a burden that had first call on whatever money was available. In the case of the automobile finance companies, it seems clear that there have been abuses. High pressure salesmen, anxious to get commissions, drove hard to sell cars "and you can pay in two years." The companies found out long ago, however, that the dangers existed and they were trimming their commitments accordingly. Since these sales are comparatively small in ratio to the whole country's business, I think the White House announcement will not result in immediate restoration of prosperity.

And then its importance is further minimized by the President's course in another field, namely, housing. We all recall the housing legislation that was proposed as a panacea for what was called a "recession" last fall. That legislation is approaching conclusion now and will soon go to the President for his signature. So let us take a look at its principal features and find what they mean.

The heart of the legislation was a provision to permit the construction or the purchase of small homes without much money as a down payment. In fact, only 10 per cent of the total cost of the property is required as a down payment. Private money lenders will finance the other 90 per cent, and the federal housing administration will insure that amount with government bonds to back the insurance. So, it is soon to be provided that I can buy a house with a value up to $6,000 if I have $600 to pay down. Anybody can get himself into deep debt with as much ease as the man on the flying trapeze, and instead of obligating himself for 18 months (as in the case of the automobile) the buyer is hooked for about 15 years. It is definitely unsound and will make not the slightest bit of improvement in general business.

Stewart MacDonald, the federal housing administrator, ought to be a good witness on the soundness of the plan. When hearings were being held in the house appropriations committee, Mr. MacDonald was asked about the idea of government insurance of as much as 90 per cent of a debt.

"Do you think that that is good business—to have a man build a home without any more equity than 10 per cent?" asked Representative Houston, Kansas Democrat.

"I don't think it is good business," replied Mr. MacDonald.

Police figures show that in 1937 a total of 943 people were killed by automobiles in New York.

2-WAY RELIEF FOR THE MISERY OF COLDS

The speed with which Bayer tablets act in relieving the distressing symptoms of colds and accompanying sore throat is utterly amazing... and the treatment is simple and pleasant. This is all you do. Crush and dissolve three genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets in one-third glass of water. Then gargle with this mixture twice, holding your head well back.

This medicinal gargle will act almost like a local anesthetic on the sore, irritated membrane of your throat. Pain eases promptly, rawness is relieved.

You will say it is remarkable. And the few cents it costs effects a big saving over expensive "throat gargles" and strong medicines. And when you buy, see that you get genuine BAYER ASPIRIN.

AROUND K. H. S. ASSEMBLY

We have been having a series of talks before the assembly which are to help us in deciding what career we wish to take up after graduating. Monday morning we heard C. F. Merten, our county engineer, in a talk discussing engineering as a career. He told us many interesting facts about the profession. An engineer must be thoroughly honest, he must have an imagination, and he must not be afraid of obstacles, because they are bound to appear. He closed by saying that there is always room for a good engineer. It is interesting to note that in all of our talks so far we have been told that there is always room for another good one in any profession.

The talk amongst the squad is tournaments—Klemme's green & white is hoped to show quite a bit of action at the County, although we will get quite a bit of competition from the majority of the teams. Maybe too much. . . . Your sports writer predicts Corwith as

Lesson for February 13

CONSERVING THE SABBATH FOR MAN

LESSON TEXT—Mark 2:23-3:6.
GOLDEN TEXT—And He said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man—Mark 2:27.
PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Holy Day.
JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Holy Day.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Shall I Do on Sunday?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Using the Sabbath for the Whole Man.

"A man's soul is in a bad state when he begins to regard man-made rites and ceremonies as things of superior importance and exalts them above the preaching of the gospel. It is a symptom of spiritual disease. There is mischief within. It is too often the recourse of an uneasy conscience. . . . No wonder St. Paul said to the Galatians, 'Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed on you labor in vain.' " These are the comments of John Charles Ryle, Lord Bishop of Liverpool, on the lesson of today.

The formalists of Christ's day, the Pharisees, had overlooked the heart of God's law and the holy living which it was intended to produce, and had bound up even the observance of the Sabbath (which was intended to be a day of rest and gladness) in such a mass of technical "thou shalt nots" that it was a day of fear. They had a false outward profession of worship and had entirely missed the true spirituality of God's law, a fact which drew upon their heads the anger and rebuke of our Lord.

While we as Christians do not observe the Jewish Sabbath, there are principles of doctrine and life bound up in this lesson concerning the Sabbath which we may with profit apply to our day of rest—the first day of the week—the resurrection day, often called "the Lord's Day."

I. False Spirituality Unmasked.

The two incidents in our lesson reveal that under the cloak of earnestly observing the law of the Sabbath the Pharisees were actually covering their own hypocrisy and their hatred for Christ.

The accusations against the disciples because they had taken and eaten grain was not on the ground that they had stolen, for the law (Deut. 23:25) guaranteed that right to the one who had passed through his neighbor's field. They contended, however, that the disciples had worked on the Sabbath in picking and hulling the grain.

The healing of the man with the withered arm revealed that back of their professed concern for the Sabbath was a real hatred for Christ. It is an appalling thing that in the house of worship on the very Sabbath day these men, outwardly so religious, were plotting against our Lord. "They watched him," and even so the enemies of the cross watch us who are his followers.

II. True Spirituality Defined.

Jesus cuts across human hypocrisy and hatred to declare that the true keeping of the Sabbath is to do the work of God. No work of necessity (like plucking the grain) or of mercy (like healing the withered arm) is ever out of place on the day of rest.

How shall we know what we may do on the Lord's Day? Two guiding principles appear in our lesson. (1) Know and follow God's Word. Note the use that Jesus made of it in verses 25 and 26. No man will misuse the Sabbath or the Lord's Day who understands God's Word and obeys it. (2) Live in accordance with the spirit of the Lord Jesus. When tradition stood in the way of the best interests of man, He broke with tradition. If He could do good on the Sabbath He did it.

A word of caution is needed, for some have sought to interpret this lesson as providing biblical ground for doing all sorts of things on their day of rest. That day is for man's good, not for his destruction. His greatest good is served by rest, worship, spiritual development, Christian fellowship, and the doing of deeds of necessity and mercy.

III. Righteous Indignation Manifested.

Our Lord rightly showed His holy anger (v. 5) against his hardhearted critics. He was the Holy One who did not permit His anger to go beyond its proper expression. Man, it must be confessed, seldom is able to control and direct even his righteous indignation. But there is such a thing as being angry without sin (Eph. 4:26), and one could sometimes wish that God's children could be moved to a holy anger against all sin and unrighteousness.

Comforting Word

This is a comforting word of Scripture which presents Christ as a shepherd whose sheep had strayed.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Curtaining Your Front Door.

YOUR front door greets your friends before you do. Is it dressed to look its best? Here are some simple rules that will be useful in selecting the material and style for front door curtaining.

Choose a fabric that looks well on both sides and that harmonizes with the outside color of your door as well as with the color scheme of the hall or room into which it opens. A simple net curtain material or plain silk are good to use but if your door is white on the outside think twice before you choose the usual ecru or pongee color. White net or silk of a color to match the shutters or the trim of the house will look infinitely more attractive and will not be too conspicuous. The curtains may be made double with a different color on the inside if need be. Pale yellow is another color that is always safe to use as it gives the effect of light shining through the door.

These curtains should be firmly anchored both top and bottom so that they do not blow about and catch in the door when it is opened and closed. Both bottom and top rods may be fastened over hooks as shown here at A.

Every homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; curtains for every type of room; lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred) to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

ARE YOU ONLY A 3/4 WIFE?

Men can never understand a three-quarter wife—a wife who is lovable for three weeks of the month—but a hell-cat the fourth.

No matter how your back aches—no matter how loudly your nerves scream—don't take it out on your husband.

For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure.

Make a note NOW to get a bottle of Pinkham's today WITHOUT FAIL from your druggist—more than a million women have written in letters reporting benefit.

The Waldorf College Acappella choir, which appears in concert at the Klemme Reformed Church on Sunday afternoon, February 20th, is directed by Prof. Odvin Hagen, who is a composer and singer as well as a director. He received his Bachelor of Music degree from St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minnesota, where he was for three years a member of the noted St. Olaf Choir. Prof. Hagen later studied at the University of Minnesota, Wesley Conservatory, and the Chicago Musical College, where he earned his Master's degree. He has studied under such teachers as Graham Reed, Dr. Wesley La Violette, Dr. Harry Anderson, Harrison D. Wild, Herbert Witherspoon, Prochowski, and Dr. F. Velius Christiansen. Prof. Hagen is planning to study in Europe this summer. This is Mr. Hagen's tenth year as director of the Waldorf Choir. "Thorough understanding of the musical significance and spiritual depth of feeling in these sacred selections was brought out by the director's interpretations," reads a statement from an Albert Lea, Minnesota, paper. Of Prof. Hagen's own compositions is said, "Prof. Hagen shows his originality and skill through the use of intricate harmonies, a variety of melodious and rhythmic themes arranged in polyphonic style, unusual tonal effects and contrasts in expression, all of which combine into a pleasing and well balanced production."

Sylvan Johnson and family, who have resided on a farm south of Clear Lake for several years, have moved to the Katter farm near Hayfield. This place was recently vacated by Ben Katter and family who moved to the Katter farm northwest of Klemme, vacated by Wm. Haberkamp who moved to his new place west of the Chas. Lenz farm.

Leon Laird, of Sidney, has returned to this community and is again working at the E. J. Schneider farm east of Klemme. Leon quit work last fall to undergo operation, from which he recovered.

Shamrocks Runner Up In County Tournament

SHAMROCKS DOWN BRITT TO PAVE WAY TO CHAMPIONSHIP

Shamrocks Lead Most Of Way, Miss Hoop In Last Minutes Of Play

The Klemme Shamrocks made their presence felt at the Hancock county tournament by battling their way into the final round of play, only to lose to Garner in the last minutes of play 18 to 24.

The Shamrocks put away in order Hayfield, Britt and Woden to enter the final game. The Klemme boys played brilliant ball all the way and went down fighting to the last second of play.

The Shamrocks defeated Britt, regarded by fans as the strongest team in the county, by the score of 36 to 33. The Shamrocks then put away Woden 38 to 19 and thus stepped into the final.

Against Garner the Shamrocks laid down a barrage that netted them 10 points to Garner's 4 in the first quarter. The second quarter the Shamrocks slowed down when Grosshuesch left the game carrying three fouls chalked up against him, but the Shamrocks lead at the half 13 to 10. The second half Garner poured in substitutes and alternated their players which had a telling effect on tiring the Shamrocks, who also had tough luck in missing shots under the basket and also failing to get a good percentage of free shots. Garner was out in front 16 to 20 at the end of the third quarter. In the last quarter with less than two minutes to play the Shamrocks rallied and brought the count up to 18, while Garner held a slim two-point lead with 20. A couple of lucky baskets put the game on ice for Garner when their last basket swished the net with but a few seconds to play.

The Shamrocks all played a hard game and were outstanding in all of the games. The Shamrock scoring machine failed to click in the game against Garner, but La covered himself with glory in the defensive game he played and was easily the outstanding player in the final game. Trampel lead the Shamrock scoring with 7 points while Engstler lead the Garner attack with 9 points.

The Shamrocks now have their sights aimed for the State tournaments ahead and will do their best to battle their way to the final at Des Moines.

Their record is one of the best ever held by a Shamrock squad. The team this year has lost but 3 games out of nineteen.

Following are the box scores of the games in which the Shamrocks participated

KLEMMME SHAMROCKS ENTER ONE-ACT PLAYS TO BE SECTIONAL PLAY NEXT WEEK

Beginning Wednesday, Feb. 23, 871 high school basketball teams in Iowa start tournament play in the first round of state competition, when the sectional gets underway.

The following week the field will be reduced to 128 teams who will compete in the districts from which eight class A and eight class B teams will emerge to enter the state finals.

In the sectional to be held at Garner, the following pairings have been announced, but the time of play has not been set.

CLASS A

Belmond vs. bye
Britt vs. bye
Corwith vs. bye
Garner vs. Kanawha

CLASS B

Crystal Lake vs. Goodell
Hayfield vs. bye
Klemme vs. Rowan
Ventura vs. Wesley

Will Form Conservation League

Jack Stevens, conservation officer from Clear Lake, was in Klemme on business Saturday. Mr. Stevens is planning a county-wide conservation organization for Hancock County Civic Clubs, Women's Clubs, Boy and Girl Scouts, Farm Organizations, etc., will all be banded together to form an organization to promote and protect game. A county-wide meeting will be called at a later date.

It will be hard to find more real entertainment packed into one evening than you will witness at the local on-act play contest to be held at the high school gymnasium next Monday evening, and there is almost a laugh in every line.

The first play, "Detour Ahead," is a first place winner in a contest for writers of plays based on farm life. The characters include a kindly old grandpa and grandma, a city slicker, a couple of ambitious men, and a woman who hunts for antiques.

"Elmer" will make its second appearance in Klemme, having been presented here four or five years ago. Those who saw it at that time will want to see it again. Elmer and his friends will furnish a lot of comedy for you.

There's a lot of action in the third play entitled "The Troups To Conquer." A boy tries to put something over on his uncle and gets tangled up with the law. He hides himself in his sweetheart's home, and when a detective tracks him to his hiding place, he disguises himself as a Swedish cook. Hilarious action follows.

"The Winner" will win your praise as a top-notch entertainment. A college professor, who is just "a poor weak man" in the hands of his wife and daughter, tries to please both of them in the matter of the daughter's suitor. A clever plan is worked out, and everybody is happy.

HANCOCK COUNTY TO FORM CONSERVATION LEAGUE

First Meeting To Be Held At Garner Thursday Evening, Feb. 24th, Everybody Welcome

A county-wide conservation league will be organized at the County Court House in Garner, Thursday evening, Feb. 24th, at 8:00 o'clock. All towns in the county have been contacted and the committee has been assured that each town will bring a large representative group from their commercial clubs, women's clubs, school teachers, garden clubs, gun clubs, farm groups, boy scouts, girl scouts, and other organizations and individuals interested in conservation. Since conservation means the wise use of lands and waters, it behooves everyone living in Iowa to be interested.

Iowa has an extensive conservation program mapped out and the cooperation of every man, woman and child is needed to make it a success. You do not need to be a hunter or a fisherman to take an active part in this program and a cordial invitation is extended to farmers and townspeople alike. Those desirous of attending but not having transportation, should contact their local business men or farm group leaders.

One of the first projects to be discussed and set up at this meeting will be the new cooperative bird program. The State of Iowa has established a game farm in Boone County and the State Conservation Commission anticipates hatching 25,000 pheasants to be distributed pro-rata to the counties in the state which are willing to cooperate in this program.

F. T. Schwob, chief of the fish and game division of the Iowa State Conservation Commission has been invited to address this group on the problems of conservation in Iowa.

George Washington Supper

The M. E. Ladies Aid will serve a twenty-five cent George Washington supper next week Tuesday evening. Everyone is invited to come. There will probably be a short program. Come and enjoy George's birthday with us. Serving will start at five-thirty, until all are served.

FARM HOME BURNED TO GROUND WEDNESDAY NIGHT

The house on the farm known as the old John Johnson place northeast of Klemme was burned to the ground early last Wednesday night.

Truels Steffens and family who were living on the farm were visiting at the home of a neighbor when the fire started. The cause of the fire was not known.

The Steffens family lost all of their household goods and clothing. Neighbors who arrived at the scene were able to save only a radio, washing machine and a few chairs as flames and smoke prevented them from reaching other household goods.

The loss was estimated at around $3,000.

SHAMROCKS PLAY AT CRYSTAL LAKE THURS

The Klemme-Crystal Lake game originally scheduled for Friday Feb. 18, was moved ahead a day and will be played Thursday night on the Crystal Lake floor. If the Shamrocks win they are assured of first place in the conference, whereas if they lose, there is a possibility of a tie with Woden.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It has been stated frequently that 90 per cent of the residents of Washington are located here because it is the site and seat of the federal government. In other words, Washington is a great city because it is the capital of the nation. The statement is not completely the truth, but a bare analysis by whomever made cannot fail to demonstrate that there are thousands who live in Washington for the reasons mentioned.

In consequence of this condition, therefore, Washington news does not get into the newspapers of the country as does other news. The Washington date line in ninety-nine out of each one hundred cases is over a story that deals with some phase of government or politics. Since Washingtonians have no vote, Washingtonians cannot be in politics.

Nevertheless, sometimes there is news about Washingtonians that is of interest to all of the country. The observation is peculiarly true of a circumstance that has lately developed. Moreover, the case in point holds a lesson for the country as a whole.

Lately, congress passed a law establishing a minimum wage for women workers in the District of Columbia. The statute was rather loosely drawn, as it had to be if it were to work at all. It left much to the discretion of a controlling agency called a minimum wage board. One of the reasons why so much discretion was left to the local agency, however, was because the subject with which the legislation deals contains political dynamite and congress did not want to establish a precedent by going too far in fixing wages. So the District of Columbia was left a rather wide scope within which to build its minimum wage structure.

That was the basis for the circumstance above mentioned, the news about Washingtonians, the lesson for the nation.

The wage board started out to hold hearings to obtain facts about the wage level and what was needed by the women workers. Stenographers, office workers, clerks in stores and this and that and the other type of employed women. Finally, the board got around to waitresses and their wages. That was where the lid blew off, because who does not know that waitresses collect considerable money in tips? Promptly, up bobbed a red hot question: should the tips, or the average monthly "take" in tips be considered as a part of the wage of waitresses?

Well, the question has not been settled yet and even when an order is issued, it will not have been settled. It will go on and on and there will be some racketeers who will organize a society or something to fight for exclusion of tips as part of the wage, if that be the order. If the board eventually decides to exclude tips and fix a minimum wage without regard to tips, the employers will carry on a drum fire of criticism about it. Why? Because the question strikes at the very heart of the relationship between employer and worker.

Any worker naturally wants as much of a return for his or her labor as can be obtained. Any employer feels equally that he is entitled to obtain needed labor as cheaply as is possible. The waitresses, therefore, took the position that the proprietor had no right to consider the tips as a part of the wage. On the other hand, the proprietor—probably with the same justification—said in effect that without the job the waitress will not get tips, and that the owner who takes the risk ought to be allowed to count those tips as part of the compensation.

Further, the customers of the restaurant were entitled to some consideration, said the proprietors. That is, they argued that the customers were charged prices for food and service that would yield the proprietor a fair profit. The tips, it was held, were gratuities on the part of the customer and they vary in amount, some large, some small. If the wage rate was to be raised and the tips excluded—somebody would have to pay more for food. The waitresses used the argument that the tips were gratuities, just as the owners did, but since they are gratuities, said the waitresses, in no wise was it fair to include them in the wage scale.

And so the argument went! But the lesson remains. No better illustration is possible, I think, than the Washington waitress wage controversy; there is no better way to show how utterly silly it is for government to mess into private affairs. Whenever government sticks its hooked nose into private affairs, just there begins an unbalancing of human nature. That is to say, there is no substitute for negotiation between humans, each inately fair, each desirous of gaining justice according to his light.

Government can and does function admirably as the agency for protection of rights that are important rights of life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. It can and does prevent encroachment upon individuals where such individuals can not protect themselves. But in matters of earning a living, just plain making money, government, in my opinion, has no place. Labor has organization where organization is necessary. Such organization does protect labor, generally speaking, because it has the right to strike. And in all probability, fixing of wages will hurt more than help labor.

While on the subject of expansion of government into every cranberry patch, it is interesting to note that some of the left wing New Dealers would like very much to put the federal government into the business of making small industrial loans. I think probably it will be some time yet before the nitwit section gets anything tangible into the open on the newest of their schemes, but it is true that they are now planning along those lines.

The thought of this group of so-called presidential advisers is that the federal government should start loaning money to small businesses so that those businesses will be independent of "the great banking trust." In short, it is proposed that the federal government should be equipped to make a loan of ten thousand or twenty thousand or fifty thousand to a small manufacturer so that he can expand his plant and take on new workers, etc., etc. It is suggested that perhaps there ought to be a new governmental agency created to handle this work so that it will be done "sympathetically" and with an understanding.

It all comes about apparently from the fact that the present administration has discovered, after five years in office, that there are great monopolies or trusts or something else in the way of combinations in existence. They have found that these monopolies are in control so far that the little fellow in business can not borrow money when he needs it to carry on his business. Something must be done for them, or else they can not have the more abundant life of plenty.

President Roosevelt has become intensely interested in having business become "home owned" or something of the kind. He has shown, for example, in his shots at utility holding companies how much he likes the type of operating company that serves its patrons and doesn't mix up in the tangle of corporations that operate in more than one town or city. They are good, according to the President, and they ought to have consideration. It might be that federal money loaned to them would save them from bankruptcy—or it might be that if they can't make a go of their business, they will go bankrupt anyway. If the federal government had a loan and a mortgage on their assets, they would become federal-owned after foreclosure. That surely would be one way for the federal government to enter the public utility business. It is just a possibility, I mean.

Every now and then some information leaks out about "emergency action" that was taken by government officials during the hectic days of the Hoover depression as distinguished from the Roosevelt depression. (The depression that was on when President Roosevelt took office in 1933 was labeled the Hoover depression in New Deal propaganda.) One of these incidents came out before the senate committee on public lands the other day. The committee was investigating the nomination of E. K. Burlew to be assistant secretary of the interior, and that formed the basis of an inquiry into general practices of the Department of the Interior which is headed by Secretary Ickes.

Mr. Burlew was answering questions as to how the department spent much of the three or four billion dollars appropriated to it for public works. Those were pump priming appropriations, if you remember, although as far as I can see the water has not started coming out of the pump yet. Anyway, Mr. Burlew let the fact drop that Secretary Ickes had bought two new automobiles in 1933. He said the purchases were due to the "emergency" and, of course, money for them came from the emergency appropriations. Senator Stiever of Oregon asked what was meant by the "emergency."

"Well, the secretary wanted the cars, and that was the emergency," Mr. Burlew replied amid laughter in the room.

Ice Tears Away Niagara Falls Bridge

This twisted mass of steel girders among mountainous blocks of ice is all that remains of the 40-year-old Falls View International bridge which collapsed into the ice-filled gorge below Niagara falls after resisting an ice jam for 24 hours. This view of the famed "honeymoon bridge" was made from the American side. The noise of the crash of the 4,500,000-pound structure blotted out for a moment the roar of Niagara falls, 500 yards upstream. Thousands of spectators watched as the girders buckled. Workmen who had been sent into the gorge to strengthen the bridge's supports narrowly escaped death when the crash came.

was victorious with a total of 276. He made the final turn home in 35 which added to his outgoing 34 gave him a total of 69 for the final round and 276 for the tournament.

American Locomotives Bound for China

First of a shipment of 20 locomotives being shipped to China by American locomotive manufacturers from Philadelphia. The shipment, one of the biggest made from the United States in recent years, was bought and paid for by the Chinese government. Plans for getting the locomotives past the Japanese blockade were not disclosed.

What Education Is For

No man regrets going to college even if it doesn't enable him to make money. It gives him a understanding to comprehend many things.

Some of the "mistakes of youth" that you grieve may be those when you had opportunity to snatch pleasure and didn't.

One excitement of the town is wholly gone—the race of horses.

True dignity is pretty tame the impertinent.

One great wellspring of courage in the determination of young men that they won't for a living—let the boobs do it.

2 Steps in Fighting Discomfort of COLD

1. ENTERS BODY THROUGH STOMACH AND INTESTINES TO EASE PAIN.

2. RELIEVES THROAT PAIN RAUWNESS.

All it usually costs to relieve misery of a cold today—is 3¢ to 15¢—relief for the period of your cold. Hence no family neglect even minor head colds.

Here is what to do: Take a BAYER tablet when you feel cold coming on— with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package. Relief comes rapidly.

The Bayer method of relief is the way many doctors now approve. You take Bayer Aspirin for relief— then if you are improved promptly, you call a family doctor.

EXPECTANT MOTHERS

Cedar Rapids, Iowa—Mrs. Adah Smith, 310 E. 1st Ave., W. says: "Before two of my babies came I was very weak. I used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it was a wonderful help to me. It stimulated my appetite and helped to relieve me of that sick nervous feeling which you're druggist today for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in liquid or tablets. See how much better you feel after using it."

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste
Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.
Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

American Legion Auxiliary Notes

The regular meeting of the Klemme unit was held at the home of Mrs. John Chambers Feb. 10th. Nine members were present. Two new members have been added to the roll call.

A request was read from the district committee woman for eight dozen cookies to be used at Knoxville Facility. Plans were made to fulfill the request.
The unit also voted to send money for the purchase of cigarettes to be used at either U. S. hospital.
Mrs. Pavey, the radio chairman, calls attention to the regular radio programs as follows:
WOI and WSUI every second and fourth Wednesday at 3:30 p. m.; WHO every first and third Tuesday at 10:45 p. m.
The department of Iowa programs must merit the time so generously given by these broadcasting companies. The best way to let them know we have a large listening audience is through our messages. Cards or letters of appreciation are the only compensation we ask.
The afternoon was spent in sewing carpet rags for the Knoxville hospital.

SCHOOL LOYALTY

Did you ever stop to realize that our school is just what we make it? It is up to us, as students, to uphold the standards which have long been established as the foundations of a good school. It is our loyalty which makes us proud of its reputation.

We show our loyalty in various ways. When we are in school we try to do good work on our lessons, we try to be courteous to our teachers and other pupils, and try to maintain order. When a visitor comes we show him around and make him feel at home so that he, too, will come to like it.

When we are not in school but at basketball games, we show our loyalty by our good sportsmanship. We support our team with yells, but we are not afraid to acknowledge that another school may have a good team, too. This applies not only to basketball, but in any activity where we compete with other schools. When we fall short, we are glad to applaud the school that has gained a victory.

After having gone four years to Klemme, we realize how much it has done for us, and we are ready to back it up anytime.

MUSIC NEWS

MISS YOUNG PRESENTS
THERAMIN PROGRAM
On Tuesday evening of last week a privileged crowd had the pleasure of being entertained by Miss Pearl Young.

Miss Young played many familiar melodies on her theramin, an almost magical musical instrument, which produces its tones by electrical vibrations. These vibrations are controlled by waving the hands. Those of the audience who worked up enough nerve to try were invited by Miss Young to play simple tunes on her instrument. Some got results while others could only make it squawk. We also enjoyed her singing, the readings and the interesting impersonations of a number of characters appearing on Major Bowes amateur hour.

It was a fine program and was presented as an educational entertainment by Northwest Assemblies, Inc.

LOCAL MUSICIANS ARE TO BROADCAST

On February 19th the final session of the ten Bandmaster's clinics, which Mr. Elstad has been attending, will be held at Mason City. This session will be composed, in part, of a band made up of students from schools in the various towns whose instructors have attended the previous sessions of the Bandmaster's Clinic. This band of about one hundred students will broadcast over KGLO sometime Saturday, February 19. Our high school band is represented by five of its members. They are: Marian Waterman, snare drummer; Jacqueline Kudje, cornetist; Elaine Buntentbach, trombonist; Paul Schult, clarinetist; and Billy Zabalka, clarinetist. Listen for the broadcast.

—KHS—

ENTRIES IN MUSIC CONTEST

There are eight entries from Klemme in the music contest to be held at Belmont the week of March 19. The band will play "Saskatchewan" by G. E. Holmes, "Grandiose" by E. De Lamater, and a march which has not yet been selected.

The girls' Glee Club will present "In Silent Night" which was harmonized by Johannes Brahms and arranged by Wallington Rieger. They will also present "A Madrigal in May." The words are by Alfred Hyatt and the music is by Ernest Newton

Elaine Buntentbach will play a trombone solo. It is entitled "From Day to Day."

Jacqueline Kudje will play a cornet solo entitled "My Regards" by Llewellyn

Marian Waterman will play a snare drum solo. She will play any six of thirteen required strokes which the judge may ask for.

A violin quartet will play "On Wings of Song" and "Schubert's Theme."

The Mixed Chorus will sing "Lamb of God" which was arranged by Melhus Christiansen

Jacqueline Kudje will play a violin solo entitled "The First Dance"

BANKING AS A CAREER

Wednesday morning we had another talk in our series of career talks. This one was by Mr. Waterman on "Banking as a Career." He told us many interesting facts about the profession. A person aspiring to be a banker must be strictly honest in every way. The field of banking is not overcrowded because during the depression years the banks in many small towns were closed. In time to come when the country is more prosperous they will be opened up again and there will be opportunities for positions. One advantage this occupation has over many others is that there is no age limit. One need not be out of it when he grows older. If one likes this kind of work, it would indeed be a pleasant occupation.

—KHS—

ONE-ACT PLAYS

The four one-act plays are to be given February 21. The date was set for February 17 at first, but, due to a basketball game the following night, it has been moved to the following Monday. The plays are to be very good, so let's have a good turn out, folks!

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

The Public Speaking class had a panel discussion Friday on Ways to Improve our school, Ways to Improve Our Town, and Ways to Improve Our State.

Later we may rewrite "Merchant of Venice" by Shakespeare and the members of our class will present it.

A man representing the Russell Studio of Mason City was at school to see if the senior class planned on getting their pictures taken there. We plan on having them taken this coming Saturday.

The advanced home economics class has started the study of child development. We plan to study the behavior of children at different ages by observation and to study desirable habits and the best ways of developing them in children. We'll probably be introduced to a little Child Psychology.

The girls in home economics have been making bread which so far has turned out successfully. We have been taking it home to show our mothers we can also bake bread. Thursday we made a cake which tasted very good for an inexperienced cook.

Stella Barz came to school on crutches last Tuesday. She had the misfortune of breaking a bone in her ankle when she slipped on some ice.

We have some new records in typing. Doris Johnson is the first person to get her name on our 40 word list. She has broken all our records with 46 words and no errors. Lester Neuberger made 37 words with no errors. Ruth Ridder made 34 words with 5 errors, and Harold Wicks made 32 words with 2 errors.

SPORTS CHATTER

Wonder if that horse shoe Stille and Grosshuesch took to the tournament did any good. . . . Garner didn't yell for Klemme in the Tournament; but we turned around and yelled for them. . . . Beat Crystal Lake then we will win the conference. . . . Wicks and Coach, better get directions straight before they leave, or sometime Romeo will be left behind. . . . Boys better be careful when they are warming up or some time a serious injury will happen.

GRADES 1 AND 2

There were many valentines in our valentine box. We opened it Monday.

We had a party on Friday for our Mothers and the children who will be starting school next fall. We sang some valentine songs; Melvin and Robert read some poems; Joyce, William and Marjorie read stories; and we had two valentine plays.

Marjorie, Iris, Mary and Isabelle got "A" in spelling on Friday.

GRADES 3 AND 4

Roger Ridder and Willis made our valentine box. It is white. It has red hearts.

We had a valentine party. Miss Brakel was our guest. We played games on the stage. Ronald, Carol, Clarence and Elizabeth planned the games. We ate our lunch at tables. Roger Ridder, Phyllis, and Willis decorated the tables. They made valentine table cloths. They had pretty napkins. Everyone had a place card. Ruth Bell, Peggy and Esther served the lunch. They made the lunch, too. We had fruit jello with whipped cream. We had fancy cookies. After the lunch we had our valentine box.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Corrine Merkel—reporter
We finished our clay modeling this week. Some children made animals and others made boats.

We made a valentine postoffice instead of the usual valentine box. Each person had an individual box in the postoffice. Our room was divided into committees. Each committee made a different part. Wesley, Ewald, Junior, Herbert M., and Edward did the carpenter work. Duard, Patricia, Corrine and Herbert Mueller made the sign. The other committee was made up of the rest of the children who decorated the sides and bottom. We are taking postmaster.

The following people feel spelling record Wesley, Betty, Ewald, Lawrence.

Iowa's Annual Average Fur Crop Is Valued At $500,000

The annual "catch" of furs in Iowa is worth about $500,000, taken as an average over a period of years. Records show, however, that the annual value of Iowa furs fluctuates as much as $150,000 a year.
In total value and number of pelts taken, muskrats rank first. Mink and skunk pelts rank next in value.

The greatest loss in the fur crop is that caused by traps not being properly tended, declares Thomas
G. Scott, wildlife specialist at Iowa State College. Improper skinning and curing also account for material fur losses. Scott suggests that the trapline should be run daily not only from the standpoint of dollars and cents but from that of humaneness.

Tallest Blonds Are "Nordic-Falians" of North Germany

By EMILY C. DAVIS

New York.—Tallest blond communities in the world, is the distinction claimed for three isolated villages in a marshland district near Bremen. Nevertheless, they are not classified as pure Nordics by Dr. Christian von Krogh of the Munich Anthropological museum, who has just completed a special study of them. He calls them "Nordic-Falians"—by analogy perhaps with the tall, medium-blond, but rather round-headed Westphalians.

This group of people are land-holding peasants, and they have held the same land for centuries. Two of the villages, Arsten and Habenhausen, have been in existence since prehistoric times; the third is comparatively new, having been founded in the Eleventh century on land that had just been drained. Its name, Neuenland, Englishes as "Newland."

They Are Exclusive.

The farmer families marry only among themselves, keeping the landless workmen of the towns excluded from their family circles. A considerable degree of inbreeding has naturally resulted. Tracing family trees back four generations, Dr. von Krogh found only 69.4 per cent as many ancestors as there would have been had no intermarrying occurred.

That inbreeding to this degree has not harmed the stock physically is evidenced by the condition of the people today. The average body height is five feet nine inches; it is the greatest group height known in Europe. The people have big heads—high, long, and wide—with large faces to match.

Tree Rings May Solve Mayan Calendar Puzzle

Washington.—Tree rings of the Southwest are now expected to solve the puzzle of the Mayan calendar, enabling archeologists at last to date the magnificent ancient civilization that flourished in the American tropics before Columbus.

New discoveries in Mayan ruins in Guatemala, which bring the solution definitely nearer, were announced here by Dr. A. V. Kidder, archeologist of the Carnegie institution of Washington. Dr. Kidder, who led the institution's latest expedition to Guatemala, told of finding pottery there, which was clearly brought down to the Mayan cities by Toltec Indian traders from their own great city of Teotihuacan, far to the north near Mexico City.

Dr. Kidder finds that these Mayas and the Toltecs who traded with them were living either about 700 A. D. or 950 A. D., but which century is correct, archeologists cannot agree. It is the two conflicting ways of translating Mayan dates into our modern calendar, one shifting Mayan history about 250 years later than the other, that Dr. Kidder now sees hope of straightening out.

Archeologists must now seek the missing link, Dr. Kidder foresees, to settle the Mayan civilization in historic centuries. And that link is pottery or some other trade object linking these Toltecs with the southwestern United States, where pueblos built by Indians are precisely dated in centuries, and even exact years, by means of the tree ring calendar evolved by science.

Pine Grown in Haste May Have Poor Qualities

Syracuse, N. Y.—Hasty work is bad work. This old and accepted tradition of the shop appears to hold good in nature also, in the production of new crops of wood to replace the old, slow-grown native forests.

At the meeting here of the Society of American Foresters, Arthur Koehler, of the United States forest service's forest products laboratory in Wisconsin, sounded a warning that quick-grown southern pine has three points of weakness: it is low in density, low in strength for its weight, and shrinks excessively in length upon drying.

The results of his investigations indicate, said Mr. Koehler, "that when the southern pines grow at an annual rate of about two-thirds of an inch in diameter inside bark or faster, they are likely to produce wood of such poor properties as to impair the usefulness for many purposes and hazard the reputation of second-growth timber in particular and wood in general. Good utilization practice therefore demands that the growth rate in individual trees be held within certain limits."

Dry Years Certain to Return After Heavy Rain Periods

Washington.—Years of drouth may be ending now, but undoubtedly they will return again some day. Therefore long-range plans for land use should always take this possibility of new distress into consideration, J. B. Kincer of the United States weather bureau stated here before the National Appraisal forum.

Thus far, all that can be said about changing climatic trends is that there is a certain wavelike character about them, groups of wet years and groups of dry years tending to "bunch." Despite all study that has been spent on the subject, true cycles, sharply defined and plainly predictable, have not yet been established beyond dispute. Nevertheless, Mr. Kincer pointed out, such study does give an historical background, which warns us that drouths in the future may be expected, just as severe as those in the past. For example, records show there was a "family" of drouth years in the early 1890's, just as bad as the one the country has just been going through.

Next Comes a Wet Period.

Doubtless, continued Mr. Kincer, when the present drouth definitely comes to an end, there will be a period of years with comparatively heavy rainfall, just as before, and little will be heard about duststorms and the like. But in planning a permanent farm program for such an area, the basic considerations should include the practical certainty that dry climatic phases, at least as severe as in the past, will recur.

Much Forest Land Is Now in Farm Ownership

Syracuse, N. Y.—More and more, the remaining and new-growing timber lands in the United States are becoming identified with individual farms, it was pointed out at the meeting of the Society of American Foresters here by Parker Anderson, Minnesota extension forester.

"Census reports indicate that woodland acreages on farms have increased during the past decade," he said. "Today one-third of all forest land in the United States is in farm ownership. Such forest areas are no doubt on better soils than most of our public forests, as farms usually were established in areas where soils are more productive for food crops. These woodland areas, therefore, should be able to yield a higher forest product return than most public land not so fortunately situated."

Mr. Anderson emphasized the ill effects of forestry's twin evils in past and present practice, private exploitation without thought for the future, and public tax policies that result in reversion to the state of tax-delinquent land and discourage reconstruction of forests.

Lead Is Found So Deep That Man Cannot Mine It

Durham, England.—Lead deposits go deeper than man can mine them, according to findings recently published by Dr. Arthur Holmes, noted British geologist, in Economic Geology.

Formerly it was believed that lead veins were closely related to the rocks containing them, but Dr. Holmes finds the lead in many rocks differs from lead in veins and is actually a different kind of lead, having a different atomic weight.

Basing his conclusions on the studies of radioactivity which he has been making for many years, Dr. Holmes has learned that rock lead (not in veins) contains the products of radioactive disintegration, while vein-lead, the material mined and sold, does not contain radioactive end-products. It therefore appears, according to Holmes, that vein-lead does not have its source in the rocks surrounding the veins, but in some deeper zone.

Rubber-Coated Seeds Carry Own Nitrogen

Washington.—A new kind of agriculture in which each seed, bulb or tuber, before being planted, is provided with its individual supply of fertilizer, fungicide to kill its enemies, and nitrogen-fixing bacteria is indicated in a patent granted here to George E. Heyl of Mill Hill, England.

According to Mr. Heyl's invention each seed would be coated with latex—the rubber-containing "milk" of the rubber tree. Before the coating is applied, fertilizer, fungicides and bacteria which can fix nitrogen from the air so plants can "eat" it, are mixed in the latex solution.

When this solution dries on the seed it leaves a thin rubber coating containing the various ingredients. Water from the surrounding soil gradually penetrates through this coating and carries the nourishment imbedded therein, to the seed. The inventor claims that plants which spring from these specially treated seeds grow better and yield greater harvests.

Historic Hoaxes

Anti-Brassiere Campaign

WHEN the late Halbert L. Hoard, editor of the Jefferson County Union, approached some of his friends in Fort Atkinson, Wis., with a request that they sign a petition which he had prepared, they didn't hesitate. They knew his paper advocated some very good things and they were willing to help "Bert" along. What they had signed was this:

The undersigned note with alarm the increase in divorces since the nineteenth amendment, the woman suffrage law. We note many more women wearing breeches than before. We can stand that, but this new fad—slab-sided dresses, flat in front—showing women in the fashion pictures as flat-chested as man, we regard with jealous eyes as an infringement.

We ask that the congress of the United States do its utmost to break down these barriers as evils that menace the future well being of society.

They very soon realized that they had been a little hasty. Their womenfolk told them they "ought to be ashamed" and that they "should mind their own business." But a welfare league in a city nearby took the matter seriously and passed a resolution supporting the campaign.

Then an official of the state board of health issued a statement saying that brassieres caused rickets in babies. Whereupon Mr. Hoard wrote an editorial in which he said:

There are cow milk fed babies right in this city that are gasping for breath, the doctor says, as they could live on monkey's milk, because monkeys are related but there are no monkeys around except with the deadly brassieres and few of those are giving milk.

Before the uproar over this matter died down, Halbert Hoard was known from coast to coast as the valiant crusader against the "deadly brassiere"—all because of a hoax which some of his obliging friends helped perpetrate.

Lord Kitchener's Body

IN AUGUST, 1926, all of England was thrilled by an announcement which indicated that one of the mysteries of the World war had at last been solved. This was the mystery surrounding the death of Lord Kitchener, first commander of the British forces in France. A signed article by "Frank Power" which appeared in the London Referee declared that his body had been discovered in a graveyard in Norway.

Kitchener had been lost at sea in May, 1916, when the ship, taking him to Russia on a secret mission, had disappeared and there had been all sorts of rumors about the case. An especially ugly one was that the government, which had wanted to get rid of Kitchener but didn't dare remove him from office because of his great popularity with the masses, had been sent on what it knew would be a fatal trip.

"Power" announced that he was bringing the body back to London. When he arrived there with a coffin, it was immediately seized by the police. When it was opened in the presence of high government officials, it was discovered that the coffin was not only empty, but that it had never held a body.

The whole affair was a publicity stunt for a new moving picture on the life of Kitchener in which "Power," whose real name was Arthur Vectis Freeman, and others were interested. Instead of profiting by it as they had hoped, a government investigation which was immediately launched and popular indignation over the hoax, did them considerable damage and discouraged further publicity stunts of that kind.

"Rare Old" Newspapers

IF, WHILE going through an old trunk in the attic, you find a copy of the Ulster County Gazette, published in Kingston, N. Y., in 1800 and containing an account of the death of George Washington, don't get excited and hurry away to tell the local newspaper publisher about your "discovery."

The chances are about 999,999 out of 1,000,000 that it's a "facsimile copy" of the Gazette of that date and thousands of them have been reprinted and distributed as souvenirs. It was first done back in 1826 in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence but most of them were produced for the Philadelphia centennial in 1876.

Naturally, in the course of time the paper becomes aged and yellow and brittle. So in that respect it's "old." But it's neither rare nor valuable, unless you can find someone who is buying "fake antiques." Even then he won't give you much for it.

The only known "genuine" copy of this famous paper is now in the Library of Congress. All of the thousands of others which bob up from time to time are reprints. Another "original" may be found some time. But it's very, very doubtful!

TIPS to Gardeners

Get Flowers Earlier

GARDENERS can get earlier bloom from many flowers by starting them indoors from seed and setting the plants in the open soil when frost danger is past.

Plant seeds of the following indoors about six weeks before the plants are to be set out: Delphinium, pink, gaillardia, lobelia, myosotis, pansy, Iceland poppy, saffron, stock and verbena.

A week or two later the following can be sown indoors: Ageratium, snapdragon, aster, dahlias, nicotiana, petunia, phlox drummondii, salpiglossis, scabiosa and vinca rosea.

Seed may be procured at your corner store sufficiently early to permit indoor planting.

With a number of popular flowers, however, there is no advantage to be gained by early starting indoors, according to Gilbert Bentley, flower expert of the Ferry Seed Institute.

In this class are sweet alyssum, calendula, calliopsis, candytuft, four o'clock, marigold and nasturtium.

AROUND the HOUSE

Tasty Sandwiches.—To vary the plain peanut butter sandwich, mix peanut butter with chili sauce, spread on slices of hot buttered brown bread, and put together with crisp lettuce leaves. Garnish with slices of dill pickle.

Before Baking Potatoes.—Let them soak in cold, salted water for 15 minutes. They will bake in half the time.

Cream Soup.—To prevent skin from forming on a cream or milk soup, beat it just before serving. The froth protects it from skin formation.

Bacon in Stuffing.—Bacon, chopped small, should be added to all stuffing. It gives a delicious flavor.

When Boiling Suet Pudding.—Put three or four slices of orange rind in the water. These will collect all the grease, and the pudding will be light.

Haddock With Tomatoes.—Lay a small dried haddock in a pan with a little water and bake for ten minutes. Remove skin and bones, and flake the fish into large flakes. Melt two tablespoonfuls butter in a saucepan, fry a little chopped onion lightly in it, add one-half cup canned tomatoes, and cook until soft. Put in the fish and little chopped parsley, season, serve over low heat until all is thoroughly hot, then serve.

Remember Our Feather Friends.—Birds welcome bread crumbs and suet when winter winds are howling, but don't forget to provide shelter for them. They may eat in comfort. Roofing boxes are easy to make and save the life of many a bird.

For Home Dressmaking.—Make a small pincushion and sew it a "bracelet" of elastic. Slip some pins in the cushion, slip a bracelet on your left wrist and the pins are always handy.

Use for Old Shears.—Old shears are useful in salad making. Shred the leaves of lettuce or other greens.

Reduced Clothing Costs

Lesson for February 20

CHOOSING COMPANIONS IN SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 3:7-19, 31-35.
GOLDEN TEXT—For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother—Mark 3:35.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Twelve Men Who Went With Jesus
JUNIOR TOPIC—Twelve Men Who Went With Jesus
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Working With Others for Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Comradeship in Christian Service.

"God can save a man who is all alone on the top of the Alps." So spoke one who sought to discourage another who wanted to give his life for Christian service. No one questions that God could thus carry on His work in sovereign power, and that there are times when He does that very thing. But ordinarily God works through men. It was "the sword of the Lord, and of Gideon" (Judges 7:18).

What a glorious, inspiring truth it is that God calls men into companionship with Him for service. Sinful and weak though they be they may become strong and holy, and do valiant service for Him.

I. The Need of Christian Workers (vv. 7-11).

Although the hostility to Christ was growing apace among the religious leaders, the people thronged about Him in the hope they might have deliverance from the devil and from disease. The need was so great that the Lord Jesus now prepared to call those who were to be His fellow-servants.

The multitudes are in just as desperate need of Christ and of the ministry of His church today. Why, then, do they not crowd the churches and press in around His servants? That is the question over which leaders of the church are puzzled. There may be many reasons, but we suggest two as being at least worthy of careful thought. The first is that we live in a time of apostasy. In the time of Christ men had only begun to hear His message of deliverance. In our day men have heard and heard again and have hardened their hearts.

Another reason is that in many, perhaps most, instances, the church has so far separated itself from the Lord that it has no power. Needy men are not interested in the dead observance of religious forms. They want to see the workings of the power of the Most High God!

Whether men know their need or not, whether they throng our churches or not, their very need of Christ should impel us to serve the Master in reaching them. The love of Christ should constrain us.

II. The Call to Christian Work (vv. 12-19).

Much might be said at this point but we must limit ourselves to two thoughts. Note that the Lord chooses his own workers; we do not choose to work for Him. Then be encouraged by the fact that He chose men of widely differing gifts, temperaments, and personal characteristics.

Then we note that He called some of unusual ability, others with little ability; some learned, and some unlearned—fishermen, a tax-gatherer, and others of various occupations. Note that none were by profession preachers. What a comfort it is to those who are in Christian work to remember that it is not what we are or may have been that counts; it is what Christ is and what he can do through us!

III. Preparation for Christian Work (vv. 31-35).

God has many ways to prepare His servants—but it seems that they all experience the heart-breaking disappointment of misunderstanding and the heart-warming joy of intimate fellowship with the Lord.

Look at verse 21 and you will realize that the family and friends of Jesus thought He was crazy because He devoted Himself so wholeheartedly to the service of His Father. Is it not strange that if a man becomes a scientist he is honored if he ruins his health in zealous research? If he is a business man he may burn the lights late in the pursuit of wealth, but if he chooses to give his life to the greatest of all occupations open to man—service for Christ—his friends and relatives try to deter him by calling him a fanatic.

Beautiful beyond words is the other side of our picture. Those who serve Him are "to be with Him" (v. 14). He sends them forth to preach, and gives them power. Yes, they even become the members of the most intimate family circle. "Behold . . . my brethren" (v. 34).

Vain Regrets and Grief

Forgive!—the years are slipping by, and Life is all too brief—A time will come when it's too late for vain regrets and grief.

Come Apart and Rest!

Even the busiest lives must have their breathing times, when the ordinary strain of effort is relaxed.

Unconscious Benefaction

It may well be that the good we unconsciously do exceeds the sum of all our purposed benefactions.

Stitches in Time

A STITCH in time goes a long way toward making your days brighter and your burdens lighter when the bustling, busy days of Spring roll 'round. No time then for leisure hours with your sewing kit, and fortunate indeed are the early birds who have got on with their Spring wardrobe. The moral?—Sew now!

Practical House Coat.

There is a versatility to this clever pattern which makes it a prime favorite for the style-conscious and the thrifty. Designed in two lengths, it lends itself perfectly to either of two needs—as an apron frock in gingham or seersucker for busy days around the house, or as a full length beach or sports coat in chintz or linen crash. The princess lines are smooth and flattering and there are just seven pieces to the pattern—a cinch to make and a joy to wear.

Slimming Silhouette.

This handsome frock in linen or crepe does wonders for the full figure, sloughing off pounds here and bulges there with the utmost ease. Streamlined from the shoulders and buttoned at the waist with two graceful scallops, this is the sort of frock which answers your need perfectly for almost any social or shopping excursion, a standby to see you through the Summer. There is a choice of long or short sleeves and the simplicity of the design—just eight pieces in all—insures success even for the inexperienced in home sewing.

Attractive Apron.

"Swell" isn't a word the teacher recommends but it is highly appropriate in describing this handy apron frock which goes about the business of being an honest-to-goodness apron, not just a postage stamp model to wear for effect. Appealing in design, easy to wear, extremely serviceable, with two convenient pockets, this perfectly swell apron was designed by a busy housewife who knew her oats! Six pieces to the pattern.

The Patterns

Pattern 1323 is designed for sizes 14 to 46 (32 to 46 bust). Size 16 requires 5 1/2 yards of 35 or 39 inch material for short length without nap. Five yards of braid required for trimming. Housecoat length 7 1/4 yards.

Pattern 1448 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 5 yards of 35 or 39 inch material, plus 1/4 yard contrast.

Pattern 1439 is designed for sizes 34 to 48. Size 36 requires 2 1/2 yards of 35 inch material. Five and one-half yards of bias strips required for finishing.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Asparagus au Gratin

ASPARAGUS AU GRATIN is just the dish to serve when you are looking for something especially good to eat that is easily and quickly made. The recipe given here calls for a medium-thick white sauce, but instead of making it you may prefer to use a can of cream of mushroom, pea, or celery soup. The soup adds flavor and eliminates the task of making sauce. If you use the soup, heat it with the cheese and serve over the asparagus on toast.

4 tbsp butter
4 tbsp flour
2 cups milk
1/2 cup grated cheese
Salt and pepper
1 can asparagus tips
6 slices toast

Melt the butter, add the flour, and stir until smooth. Add the milk and cook until thick, stirring constantly. Add the cheese and season with salt and pepper. Heat the asparagus tips in their own liquid until they are hot. Arrange the tips on the toast and serve with the hot cheese sauce.

SPRING FILLED

MATTRESSES

Most of our Customers own one or more Spring-filled Mattresses, and you know how comfortable they are

In our buying trips we have visited the factories many times and watched them make the mattresses which we sell.

Best and more expensive mattresses are well made, of good construction and good covering material, but cheap mattresses are only a good looking imitation.

If you pay $8.50 to $10.50 you may expect your spring-filled mattress to last about two years, because these are cheap, good looking imitations.

If you pay $15.00 to $22.00 you get the best construction that money can buy, and your mattress should last almost as long as you keep house

This store does not carry the $8.50 to $10.50 grade in spring-filled mattresses, but we do carry a dozen kinds of the better mattresses from $15.00 to $37.50

We have "open samples" of all these kinds and can show you exactly what is in them.

We prefer to sell Good Merchandise so that our Customers are Pleased and will come back Again and Again.

GARNER—A bench warrant for the arrest of LeRoy Anderson, Jr., 17, was issued at Garner Saturday afternoon. He had been allowed until 1:30 to provide himself with legal counsel, but failed to return to the courtroom. His father, of Red Oak, Minn., who had appeared with him, was also missing from Garner Saturday night. Young Anderson faced charges growing out of a Thanksgiving night brawl at a Garner dance, in which Marvin Hansen of Klemme was struck, suffering a skull fracture and a broken ear drum. Anderson was said to have been the leader of a gang of youths which precipitated the fight with a group of Klemme men..

Anderson was a star athlete, and had formerly attended Corpus Christi high school at Fort Dodge before coming to Garner. Last week he was ruled ineligible from further competition in high school sports during the remainder of the school year.

Shamrocks Win Seven Eagles Conference Race

DOWN CRYSTAL LAKE TO CINCH CONFERENCE TITLE

Won Nine Out Of Ten Starts To Become First Klemme Team To Hold Conference Cup

Thurs. night on the Crystal Lake floor the Klemme Shamrocks made basketball history when, by virtue of a 35 to 27 win over Crystal Lake, they became the first Klemme team ever to win the Seven Eagles Conference Championship.

Starting the conference play early in the season with a 54 to 19 win over Hayfield, the Shamrocks continued to run up the scores until they suffered a 31 to 30 defeat at the hands of an inspired Woden team a couple of weeks ago. Playing an offensive style of game, the Green and White have piled up a total of 403 points to their opponents 217, to average 40.3 points per game and hold their opponents to 21.7 points per game.

At Crystal Lake Thursday night both teams counted soon after play started and kept the score nip and tuck until late in the second quarter when the Shamrocks forged ahead to lead at the half 19 to 11.

Coming out after the half-time rest period the Shamrocks set up a much stiffer defense than is their usual procedure, but still could not succeed in stopping the plucky little Laker quintet, who steadily closed the gap in the score until midway in the fourth quarter it stood at 22 to 24 in favor of Klemme. With only about four minutes to play the Shamrocks started to play a more deliberate passing game and succeeded in opening up the Crystal Lake defense enough to score 11 points before the final whistle blew, making the final count 35 to 27.

Jorgenson paced his mates in the scoring by garnering nine field goals and a free throw for 19 points, while Grosshuesch played a sweet floor game and chalked up five points of his own.

Jilek looked best for the Lakers, as he was the starting point of nearly every offensive play, and hit the hoop for 13 points.

Following is the box score of the game.

Little Shamrocks Lose

The Little Shamrocks were completely out of luck Thursday night and after a nip and tuck battle went down by a score of 15 to 16 at the hands of the Crystal Lake reserves for their first conference defeat of the season. The score never varied over a point or two throughout the whole game, but Klemme usually held what edge there was. Then in the final minutes of play when the Little Shamrocks were leading by one point, Munson, Crystal Lake guard, slipped in a neat one-handed shot on the run, to give the Crystal Lake reserves their margin of victory.

Barz and Kluckhohn each gathered in 5 points to lead the Klemme scoring, while Volding looked best for Crystal Lake with 7.

The Little Shamrocks have a fine record this year, having won ten of the thirteen games they have played. They lost one to Garner, one to Belmont, and then this last one to Crystal Lake.

FUNERAL SERVICES HELD THIS AFTERNOON FOR FORMER KLEMME MAN

Leonard Sampson Died In Des Moines Sunday After Short Illness

Funeral services for Leonard Sampson, former Klemme resident, were held at 2:00 o'clock this Wednesday afternoon, February 23rd, with Dr. Wm. Zabalka officiating.

Mrs. C. A. Arnold, Mrs. George Schoenwetter, Matt Smith and Henry Ludeke were the singers and he was carried to his resting place on the family lot in the Klemme cemetery by Harry Gibbs, Herman Schuldt, Ralph Ludeke, E. J. Arnold, Joseph Schuldt and Chas. Fritzel.

Obituary

Leonard Elias Sampson was born June 24, 1885 on a farm near Colesburg, Iowa, the youngest of a family of eight children born to his parents, William Sampson and Amelia Schwichtenberg.

He lived on the Colesburg farm with his parents until fifteen years of age. Here he completed his common school education, was confirmed in Catechism and joined the Methodist Church.

He moved with his family to Hancock County in the year 1900, and lived on the farm east of Klemme for 29 years. While here he completed his education in the Klemme High School.

It was on this farm that he spent the best years of his life. He was not a quarrelsome man and lived in peace and harmony with his family and his neighbors.

While living here he was a member of the Trustee Board of the Methodist Church, sang in the choir and was generally useful in church.

It was on that farm that his mother died in 1903. His twin brother, Emil, passed to the great beyond in 1913, and his father finished his earthly career in 1917.

On March 18th, 1914, Leonard Sampson and Jennie Wichman were married at Red Oak, Illinois. They commenced housekeeping on this same farm, and here their children were born.

Leonard loved this farm, but after fifteen years, because of his failing health, the family moved to town where they operated the Klemme Telephone Office for 3 1/2 years, after which they moved to Des Moines, where they have now lived four years.

For the last 10 years Leonard has been in frail health. It seems that the valves of his heart were not operating properly and thus he lacked the strong, rugged circulation so necessary to good health, and when just recently he developed a touch of the "Flu"—his heart stopped. This was about 5 p. m. Sunday, Feb. 20, 1938.

He reached the age of 52 years, 7 months and 27 days.

He leaves to mourn his passing besides his wife, three children, Paul, Irma and Norman; three sisters, Mrs. W. C. A. Gast, Britt, Ia.; Mrs. E. H. Patet, Klemme, Ia.; and Mrs. F. C. Griewe, Walker, Ia.; and many other relatives and friends.

ESTHER TRAMPSEL AND FRED CAROLES MARRIED SUNDAY

On Sunday, February 20th at 1:00 p. m., Miss Esther Trampel, daughter of Mrs. August Trampel, and Mr. Fred Caroles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Caroles, Sr., were united in marriage at the Klemme Reformed Church by the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch.

They were attended by Cecil Bridges and Lucille Stille, friends of the couple.

The bride wore a cadet blue dress and the maid of honor wore a navy blue dress.

The groom and best man wore the conventional dark suits.

The bride graduated from the Klemme High School with the class of 1935 and since then has been at home.

The bridegroom received his education in Liberty township and has since been employed in that vicinity.

After a short wedding trip in Minnesota, the young couple will make their home near Galt, Iowa.

FORMER KLEMME BOY WEDS VIRGINIA, MINNESOTA, GIRL

Allan Klotzbach Was Married In Indiana Last September

Mr. and Mrs. Levi Klotzbach have received an announcement of the marriage of their son, Allan, of McGregor, Iowa, to Miss Elna Jaki, of Virginia, Minnesota, which took place in Indiana, September 4th, and which the young couple have kept secret since that time.

The Groom was born in McGregor and came to Klemme with his parents when a small boy. He attended the Klemme school and is a high school graduate. After graduating he went to McGregor where he worked for some time on a dairy farm.

The bride after completing her high school work, entered nursing school and is a registered nurse.

The young couple are now living at Chrishome, Minnesota, where Mr. Klotzbach is employed in a logging mill.

CLIFFORD MONTGOMERY IS NEW JANITOR AT SCHOOL

At the meeting of the school board Tuesday night, Clifford Montgomery was hired as janitor of the Klemme school. He will begin work July 1st, and succeeds Emil Patet who has handled the work efficiently for a number of years. Mr. Patet has not been in the best of health the past year and asked to be released from the work.

ELMER SCHLEI DIED SATURDAY AFTERNOON

Had Lived On Farm Southeast Of Klemme Since 1916

Funeral services were held at the Klemme Reformed Church Tuesday afternoon in charge of Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch. A quartet consisting of Mrs. L. Johnson, Miss Ethel Barz, Harvey Barz and Edwin Thiemann sang, "We Are Going Down The Valley One By One," and "There Will Be No Disappointments In Heaven."

Obituary

Elmer Schlei was born in Liberty Township, Feb. 9th, 1890. He received baptism in the Liberty Methodist Church. He became acquainted with sorrow early in life for his father died when Elmer was only seven years of age. He attended the public schools and received his religious education in the Methodist Church. After a course in Catechism he was received into membership of the Church by confirmation.

Elmer remained on the home farm with his mother until he was 26 years of age, when he established a home of his own. He was united in marriage to Miss Berth Haupt March 8th, 1916. The young couple located on a farm 2 miles south and 1 mile west of Klemme, which is still the Schlei home. Mr. Schlei united with the Reformed Church of Klemme during the pastorate of Rev. Wm. Thiel. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Schlei was blessed with one child, a son, Dale, who now remains to comfort his mother.

Mr. Schlei passed away suddenly and unexpectedly, Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, Feb. 19th, 1938. He had been ill during the winter but his ailments were not considered to be of a serious nature. The cause of his death was heart attack. He reached the age of 48 years and 10 days.

Mr. Schlei loved his home, a home that we may call ideal in every respect. The family are loyal church members, where Dale now has charge of a Sunday School class. Mr. Schlei enjoyed the respect of the entire community. Many friends will ever remember him by his honest and upright character and his pleasant and friendly nature. He proved himself to be a true friend and had a heart of compassion for those who were in need.

Besides his wife and son, Dale, the following brothers and sisters survive him: His twin brother Alfred of Garner; William, Ben, and Edward of Fenton, Ia.; Mrs. Della Weisbrod, of Fenton, and Mrs. Edwin Josten of Klemme.

Burial was made in the Klemme cemetery.

That Conference

Washington.—A good many persons in Washington still are arguing the point whether President Roosevelt and Secretary Roper, of the Department of Commerce, made a mistake in arranging for the so-called conference of nearly a thousand "small" business men. The conference that turned into a near riot provided plenty of publicity, if that was what was planned, but it was publicity of a distinctly bad sort from a political standpoint. On the other hand, some way, some how, there came out of that conference a score or more of recommendations, and some of them were the very "recommendations" which Mr. Roosevelt wanted from "business interests." It is a new vehicle on which bureaucrats and advisers can ride.

But before I attempt an analysis of the results that may flow from the conference, a review of the meeting itself should be recorded. The business men, widely publicized as being "small and independent fellows" were convened in the Commerce Department auditorium. It had all of the earmarks of a session for which a program had been drawn up here in Washington. It appeared to be cut and dried. No sooner had the session convened, however, than things began to happen. Since there were nearly a thousand individuals, there were nearly one thousand different views, and the individuals sought in various ways to express themselves. The result of the first day's meetings can be described, therefore, as nil—unless you want to consider the riot, the necessity for physically ejecting some of the members who became violent in their objections, as a result. It was a session in which shouts were heard about "hand-picked chairman" and "log rolling" and "you can't dictate to me."

With the first day's session a flop, machinery somehow was set in motion for the second day so that a recurrence of the riot would be avoided. The conference was broken up into group or sectional meetings. It was hunted that big things could be expected from these in the shape of concrete recommendations. Well, we observers found instead that the big conference-riot of the little business men had been broken up into some ten or twelve smaller conference-riots. Just as an example: one session was so uproarious that it was found necessary to call in the building police and forcibly throw out one little business man who measured over six feet and weighed plenty.

Those were the physical phases of the two-day conference. Yet, believe it or not, there were "recommendations" made by those nearly one thousand business men representing small businesses of the country. They were duly presented to President Roosevelt who sent out word to the newspaper correspondents afterward that some of those recommendations were, indeed, quite constructive.

I shall not attempt to set them down here. They would take more space than is available. I noted among them, however, one item that urged the government to "establish a procedure to encourage and facilitate loans to small business." It recalled to me that there has been much talk among "advanced thinkers" in the administration that the government should have an agency to make loans to small businesses. It was discussed in these columns recently. Undoubtedly, it was just a coincidence that this "recommendation" should come from the small business men while the advisers to the President were considering it.

Included in the recommendations, however, were proposals for the administration to do several things that thus far have not had administration backing. One of these was a recommendation that wage and hour regulatory legislation should be abandoned. No one seems to know from whence that item came; and it was variously reported as not having had the "full support of the conference." It may have been that even the 12 chairmen who carried the recommendations to the White House meeting with the President performed a miracle—but there is no denying that the item was included and quite a few members of the Democratic party in congress were glad to see it.

So, the conference has been held and its work and efforts to solve the depression problems are spread on the first pages of newspapers. The results in this direction would seem to justify Mr. Roosevelt's recent intimations that the business men do not know what they want. Such a view would be correct if the conference itself had been representative. True, the delegates came from all sections of the country. True, all excepting a very few were of the type known as small business men. But it must not be overlooked that the conference was planned, invitations extended and program written from Washington. I think it is quite unlikely that men would be invited without somebody in the administration having knowledge of their general attitude toward the New Deal. There actually may be something to the charge that was variously hurled in the sessions that chairmen were hand picked and that there was a bit of log rolling done, just a teeny, weeny bit of it.

Concerning the after-effects, one can hear many observations. Some say that the bulk of the small business men went away from Washington nursing a grudge; others add that many of the delegates went back home with a sour idea of government conferences and, therefore, with a willingness to ridicule the administration, and still others hold the conviction that the very confusion that came from the meeting provided Mr. Roosevelt with the horrible example that he wants in his criticism of business leadership. It seems to me there is ground for each of these three conclusions. Time, alone, will disclose the ultimate effects. Mr. Roosevelt may utilize the recommendations in a fireside chat or a message to congress. Some of his advisers may bear down on the lack of agreement and understanding among business men. Or, the whole thing may be treated very seriously and an attempt made to convince the country that the administration is being guided by what it believes the business interests want—as shown in the recommendations of the conference.

The Treasury laid some stress on announcement the other day that it will begin a series of borrowings late this month that likely will be the last borrowings by the federal government "in this generation."

Treasury to Borrow

It was stated that between 200 and 300 millions will be borrowed during the next several months, but that June tax payments and subsequent collections will provide money for current needs. That is to say there will be no need for "new money" which is money borrowed out of the money market or banks.

It has not been made clear how the Treasury will accomplish the objective of cessation of borrowing at this time. President Roosevelt has predicted that there will be a deficit of about one billion dollars in the next fiscal year. A Treasury deficit can mean only one thing, namely, that the amount of income is less than the amount of the expenditures. Something appears to be screwy in a circumstance where there is a deficit of a billion and only a few hundred millions have to be borrowed.

However it may be accomplished, it is hopeful to think that borrowings are going to be terminated. The Treasury has been doing it for a long, long time. I think it is about nine years that the Treasury has faced a deficit each year and there has been new money borrowed to pay the bills. Those borrowings ranged anywhere from half a billion during 1930 to more than four billions in 1933 and 1934.

The Treasury's announcement explained that the Treasury would receive more than one billion dollars for the account of its trust funds during this year. Trust funds are segregated moneys, such as the fund for payment of social security benefits. Well, it strikes me as a bit unfair to say the Treasury will not borrow any new money this year when it actually is borrowing from the social security fund. There is no violation of law in that course, because the law says the social security funds must be invested in government bonds.

The borrowing from social security funds calls attention to another phase of government finance. Those funds come from payroll taxes. They are taxes paid by the workers as well as by the employer. It has occurred to me, therefore, that unless the government's revenue can be made to balance its expenditures, sometime in the future workers will want to obtain payment under the provisions and there will be nothing but government bonds in the fund. Further, there is every possibility—indeed, I believe it is a probability—that these payroll taxes are going to bear more heavily on the workers of the future than they do today.

There seems little doubt that the social security dream is here to stay. Unworkable as it is, there will be no politician with sufficient courage ever to tell the voters of his constituency that the social security act will fail. Some of the "advanced thinkers" among the New Dealers have had spasms when remarks like that were made in their presence. The real spasms, however, will develop when the public is given a clear understanding of what that law does to a civilization—when it is shown by operation that much more out of the pockets of those who are supposed to benefit than they ever can get back.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

For Washington's Birthday, FEBRUARY 22 would not be completely celebrated if cherries were not featured in some way during the day. It is true that the story of the cherry tree and George Washington is more closely connected in the memory of many of us than his great prowess as the Father of our Country. We seem to take for granted his ability as a leader and talk about the cherry tree episode of his youth.

This recipe for cherry pie is made to use the entire contents of a No. 2 can of cherries, which holds 2½ cupfuls.

Cherry Pie.

1 No. 2 can Pitted 2 tablespoons corn-
Red Sour Cherries starch
6 tablespoons sugar ½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter

Line an 8-inch pie pan with pastry. Drain the cherries from the juice and place them in the pastry shell. Mix together sugar, cornstarch and salt and sprinkle over the cherries. Pour on the juice; dot with butter and cover with a thin top crust or with strips of pastry. Bake in a hot oven (475 degrees) for 12 minutes, reduce temperature to 425 degrees and continue baking for 45 minutes. MARJORIE H. BLACK.

Lesson for February 27

MEASURING A MAN'S WORTH

LESSON TEXT—Mark 5:1-17. GOLDEN TEXT—How much then is a man of more value than a sheep?—Matthew 12:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Went Home Well.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Is a Man Worth?

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Am I Worth?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Putting People Before Profit.

Awful is the scene that meets us as we go with our Lord across the sea of Galilee and draw up to the shore of the country of the Gadarenes. Distressing beyond words is the plight of the man who is under the power of a legion of the demons of Satan; inspiring is the assurance that Christ is victor over the devil and his hosts; soul-searching is the disappointing picture of the men as they evaluate their brother's spiritual need over against personal gain.

The same mighty conflict between the two great spiritual kingdoms, of good and evil, God and Satan, goes on in our day. Jesus Christ is still "greater . . . than he that is in the world" (1 John 4:4). Equally true is it that we must each one of us choose what is to be our attitude toward the conflict, and especially toward the Christ.

I. The Power of Satan (vv. 1-5).

Foolish men sometimes speak boldly about Satan as though he were only a weakling, or perchance but a creature of legend.

The devil, who is but one being, operates through many evil spirits, or demons. They are everywhere active, and it appears from Scripture that they seek a physical body through which they may function. Demon-possession, which was so common in our Lord's day, still exists, especially on the mission field. There are some who believe that the almost unbelievable cunning and brazen wickedness of modern gangsters is an expression of demoniacal control.

The text graphically portrays what becomes of a poor soul who has gotten into the clutches of Satan. It is a dark and terrifying picture known to us even in this year of 1938. But, thank God, there is a way of deliverance.

II. The Victory of Christ (vv. 6-13).

The command of Jesus (v. 8) evidently preceded the cry of the demons (v. 7). Notice that the demons who hated our Lord had no doubts about His being the Son of God. They knew Him. How strange it is that many voices that deny His deity come from the pulpit, the professor's chair, or over the radio, in the name of Christianity!

The demons knew His power, also, for though they adored Him not to torment them, they realized that they must obey His command to "come out of the man." They asked permission to enter the swine.

III. The Perversity of Man (vv. 14-17).

The keepers of the swine fled to tell the owners. They and others came to see what had happened. They saw the demoniac seated, clothed and in his right mind, "and they greatly rejoiced and magnified the name of the Lord." Did they? No, indeed! "They were afraid" (v. 15), "and they began to pray him to depart" (v. 17).

Why were they afraid? Two reasons are suggested. In the first place they wanted no spiritual activity that would interfere with their business. Swine were of more value in their sight than the liberation of demon-possessed men. They have their successors in our day. Such are the men who rent their buildings for taverns and dance halls because they want money. Akin to them are those who counsel against the expenditure of money to keep the church open, the Sunday school operating, and for the sending of missionaries into fields white unto harvest.

A tract entitled "Suppose" asks the pertinent and searching question, "Suppose I were offered $10,000 for every soul I led to Christ; would that impel me to do more than I now do because of the constraining love of Christ?"

Another reason for their fear was that they did not want to be disturbed in their state of spiritual somnolence. Someone has said that the reason the church of our day does not have a revival is because it doesn't want it. If revival fires began to burn crooked things would have to be made straight, worldliness would have to be put away, the pursuit of money would have to be set aside while men sought souls.

Careful Planning

Just the difference in the way the two men use their heads makes the difference in the way they conduct their business. Misdirected, systemless work will make any business management ineffective, while careful planning, simple, effective system, will aid even moderate ability to accomplish vast results.

Repentance

To grieve over sin is one thing, to repent is another.—Robertson.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

CLAUDETTE COLBERT who rushed off to Europe for a long vacation the day she finished Paramount's "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife" revealed some pet economies of her star friends just before she left.

She is extravagant about clothes, but her French thrift makes her cling to her old shoes. Gary Cooper rolls his own cigarettes. Fredric March always buys two packs of cigarettes at a time because they're a penny cheaper that way. Fred MacMurray saves razor blades to be resharpened. Martha Raye wears sturdy, service-weight stockings except on gala occasions.

Claudette Colbert

Most thrifty of all is Marlene Dietrich. She is a string saver. Her maid is always wrapping up packages for her to take to the studio and the string comes in handy.

Al Pearce celebrated the beginning of his second year with his present radio sponsor and his eleventh year on the air in his own peculiar fashion. He gave his orchestra leader a rubber baton so there would be no stiffness in his rhythms and presented himself with the most enormous news camera you ever saw.

When Fred Astaire returned from vacation to the R. K. O. studio recently to start work on his next picture with Ginger Rogers, he found the amusement park set of "Damsel in Distress" still standing. Kindly guy that he is, he arranged to buy all the slides and games and sent them to an orphan's home.

Errol Flynn did not even stop to hear congratulations on his grand performance in "Robin Hood." The minute the preview was over and he was told that no retakes were necessary, he hopped a plane to Boston where he bought a seventy-five foot boat (a ketch if you will be technical about it) in which he sailed off to the Bahamas for some fishing.

Hollywood players are trying to figure out some unusual hobby or secret ambition because the current radio craze is to present a film star doing something quite different from their work on the screen. Cecil De Mille started it by having Jack

Jack Benny

Olivia de Havilland

Benny, Burns and Allen, and Bob Burns play serious dramatic roles on the air. Paul Whiteman followed that up by presenting Helen Vinson as a concert pianist. Bing Crosby lets Fay Wray blow tunes on a sweet potato and Olivia de Havilland plays chopsticks.

ODDS AND ENDS—Kate Smith has received an autographed copy of Eleanor Roosevelt's newest book from the President's wife herself . . . Louise Fazenda rounds out her twentieth year of motion picture making with "Singing Your Lady" and just for fun she is dashing around the country, slipping into theaters from New York to Texas and listening to audience comments . . . The cook book which radio's mystery chef sends to listeners has been requested by the wives of 21 United States senators, the widows of two Presidents and stewards of the royal household in England . . . Edward G. Robinson is so pleased over his success on the radio that he is much more thrilled when fans call him "Steve Wilson" than he is when they hail him as "Little Caesar" or any of his other gangster roles . . . The picture Robert Taylor made in England was previewed in a little California town and people who were there report that it will make him the outstanding favorite of the stage. © Western Newspaper Union.

TIPS to Gardeners

The First Step

THE first step toward a successful garden is an early start. Spade or plow as soon as possible. If a handful of soil gripped firmly can be crumbled readily upon release, the soil is in condition to be worked.

It is important that fertilizer be used cautiously, advises Harold Coulter, vegetable expert of the Ferry Seed Institute. An excess is often harmful, particularly in growing fruits, such as tomatoes, cucumbers and peppers.

Garden preparation effort is wasted if you do not plant seeds from dependable sources. Select your favorite varieties from the nearby store before the supply is depleted, even though it is not yet time to plant. Make sure the seeds you buy are freshly packed.

Weather conditions permitting, it is advisable to spade into the soil some rotted manure, rotted leaves or lawn clippings, or rotted garden refuse. Clay soils are improved in texture by this treatment, and sandy soils are improved in water holding capacity.

WORKS IN 2 WAYS ON DISCOMFORT OF COLDS

2. If throat is sore from the cold, crush and stir 3 BAYER ASPIRIN tablets in 1/2 glass of water. Gargle twice. This eases throat rawness and soreness almost instantly.

All it usually costs to relieve the misery of a cold today—is 3¢ to 5¢—relief for the period of your cold 15¢ to 25¢. Hence no family need neglect even minor head colds.

Here is what to do: Take two BAYER tablets when you feel a cold coming on—with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package. Relief comes rapidly.

The Bayer method of relieving colds is the way many doctors approve. You take Bayer Aspirin for relief—then if you are not improved promptly, you call the family doctor.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

GRASSHOPPER POISON

Much has been printed on the subject of grasshopper poison and its effect on wildlife. Recently Dr. Carl J. Drake, State Entomologist, prepared a reply to an inquiry on the subject which sets out in brief the answers to numerous questions regarding the use of poison to kill grasshoppers and the results of studies made on its effect on wildlife.

"Grasshopper bait has been used very extensively in Iowa and other States for many years," explains Dr. Drake in his reply. "If scattered according to instructions there is absolutely no danger of poisoning farm animals, wild animals or human beings. In order to gain positive information concerning the effect on wildlife of poison bran, Mr. W. E. Beed of the U. S. Biological Survey spent the summer of 1936 in western Iowa where heavy poisoning was being done. Beed, in cooperation with some of the State Conservation Officers and the farmers concerned, checked the grasshopper work on 461 farms. The farmers kept a daily watch of the wild birds and mammals on each farm to see whether or not they could find any dead ones. During the entire period not a single bird, mammal or farm animal was destroyed by the bait, yet several thousands of tons of bait were distributed in western Iowa.

Similar studies have been conducted by other States and the United States Department of Agriculture.

"When farm animals, human beings or wildlife are poisoned by poisoned grasshopper bait," continues Drake, "it is due to gross carelessness on the part of the individual farmer."

The studies indicate that the winter food and cover for wildlife destroyed by grasshoppers causes a greater loss to wildlife than grasshopper poison.

SENIORS HAD PICTURES TAKEN LAST SATURDAY

The seniors left Klemme at 8:00 o'clock last Saturday morning for Mason City to have their pictures taken.

It seems the boys got through smiling for the camera birdie first, so started on a tour. We boys, except Schuldt (where was he) were shown through the Globe-Gazette plant in the morning. After lunch we visited the Y.M.C.A. and enjoyed a little recreation. Then we went over to the People's Gas & Electric Co. and saw a performance put on by a mechanical man.

The girls put in their time shopping and taking in a show, and the ones who were band members broadcasted over KGLO in a band made up of over 100 pieces from various schools in north Iowa.

Late in the afternoon our proofs were gotten, and some had them taken over. Then the majority of the class came home. We hope Russell's camera isn't broken.

MARIE BLANK TALKS TO HIGH SCHOOL

Wednesday morning Marie Blank gave an assembly talk on "Beauty Culture As A Career." She impressed upon us the fact that there is more in a course of beauty culture than we would think. In your course of beauty culture you are required to learn all of the bones and muscles of the arms, face, neck, chest and shoulders; you are required to learn all about the diseases, many of which you didn't know existed; and you are required to learn about electricity.

The tuition charges need not be paid all at one time. It is possible to have fifty dollars and go to school as long as it suffices and then go out and earn some more to come back and pick up just where you left off.

Another factor of great help to those who have only a limited amount to spend for their education, is a stenographer who will try to place you in homes where you can earn your room rent with out much work.

This work has both advantages and disadvantages, as has any work. If you go into it and do your best, you're sure to come out on top.

In their study of child behavior the Advanced Home Economics has been observing Miss Hanson's first and second graders. On different days girls spend an hour in the room and study their habits, manners, ability, etc. It is very interesting.

On Jan. 1, 1937, Iowa ranked first in number of hogs, second in beef cattle and eleventh in number of sheep and lambs, or second in total number of meat animals.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2

The second graders took an Achievement test in reading on Wednesday.

Donna Mae Hevlin has been absent this week.

Miss Hansen has been reading us the story of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," this week.

We have been learning songs from our new music book.

Some of the first graders have new books to read. The second graders are going to have new books too.

GRADES 3 AND 4

The third grade arithmetic class is having an airplane race. Ruth Smith and Esther Tiggeman are the pilots of the two planes. Each plane has several passengers. The baggage for each trip consists of either addition or subtraction combinations.

We had speed and comprehension tests in both reading classes on Tuesday.

We are making snow flakes and Lincoln posters in art class.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Patricia Kudje and Eunice Larsen
—Reporters

We listened to the radio program over KGLO Thursday afternoon. Miss Hansen's and Miss Azeltine's room came up to listen. The program was music from Vienna, Austria, and a story "Why the Owl Flies at Night." The sixth graders will study Austria soon in Geography.

The fifth graders are making health posters about foods and food elements. Some are on the bulletin board.

Last week we made a mistake in the reporter's name. Barbara Johnson was reporter instead of Corrine Merkel.

We took down our valentine postoffice Wednesday. We had a party on Valentine's Day. Eunice Larsen was chairman of the entertainment committee.

The sixth graders made a rating of nine in their last Arithmetic self-testing drill. It is their highest score. They hope to keep their rating that high.

GRADES 7 AND 8

On Monday we had a valentine party. We played several games. Ellen Kilgore and Lucille Harbeck distributed the valentines. They were assisted by Homer Blickenderfer and Elwyn Jacobs.

We had a spell down this week. Melvin Coobs and Ellen Kilgore were the last to go down.

We have been writing news stories and studying editorials in English in the eighth grade.

"Sit Down," said Frank Hague . . .

AND ROOSEVELT SAT DOWN!

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

New Yorkers are casting worried glances across the Hudson these days. Those who will brave the "outer world" that lies over the river may some day visit Jersey City and see for themselves.

Jersey City, they allege, is in the grips of a tyrant, a dictator, a reborn Huey P. Long. His name is Frank Hague.

Mayor Hague has undoubtedly ruled all New Jersey at least 10 years, probably more. He made A. Harry Moore a United States senator, later a governor. More recently he sent his personal attorney, John Milton, to the upper house in Washington. Since 1913 he has been in absolute control of Jersey City, an overgrown community of 315,000 souls lying within eyeshot of Manhattan's towers.

Frank Hague is a smart politician. Behind his multi-colored exploits lies a genius for grasping votes and power by methods that are exasperating but legal. When a legislative committee recently tried to seize Hudson county vote records (on a charge of election fraud), Hague packed off on a Florida vacation and his assistant in charge of the books was reported ill. This prompted a New York newspaper reporter to comment that the official "has been indisposed on other occasions when investigations involving his office were in progress."

At another time, in 1928, Hague "testified" before a legislative committee investigating Jersey City by replying, "I decline to answer" to practically every question fired at him.

And He Sat Down!

The height of Hague's impudence arrived one night in 1932 when Franklin D. Roosevelt, campaigning for the presidency, was being escorted by the mayor from gathering to gathering. Mr. Roosevelt was just warming up to a large outdoor crowd when Hague, pulling at his coat, snapped:

"That's enough. Sit down."

The future President of the United States sat down.

Currently Frank Hague is in the headlines as a C. I. O. baiter. He has refused to open the civic doors to John Lewis' organizers. They cannot hire a hall; Hague's efficient police simply run them out of town. The mayor, who once thoughtlessly boasted that "I am the law," has arranged convenient legal weapons to best the C. I. O. One law prohibits distribution of non-commercial literature, like C. I. O. pamphlets. Another enables police to arrest anyone who can't give sat-

HIS HONOR THE MAYOR . . . Frank Hague, the C. I. O. baiting chief executive of Jersey City, N. J., virtual dictator over a city in the shadows of Manhattan. "I am the law," he once said.

penn by throwing tremendous and unexpected support to the league and being elected to the first Jersey City commission.

He was named commissioner of public safety, a tailor-made situation for the smart politician. Hague, as head of the police and fire departments, acquired a foundation on which to build his personal political organization. To his credit, he transformed Jersey City's police from a corrupt lot of deadwood into an organization of clear-headed, purposeful young men. Whether his aim was sincere is beside the point; the new police and fire departments awakened civic pride, and all hands pointed at Frank Hague as the man who had accomplished it.

Eventually he was elected mayor and the Hague star ascended rapidly. Next step in cementing his political foundation was the Jersey City medical center. Behind this splendid nine-building institution is a story of the mayor's babyhood, of the days when he was so weak and delicate that his mother took him each day to St. Francis' hospital. There she received sympathy—the future politician's life was saved. Hague never forgot the stories his mother told him of those daily trips. Today's medical center has been a life-long ambition, a humanitarian last election. He pounces on weak spots with ferocity, calling responsible leaders to task.

Last November, when Senator Moore (a Hague puppet) was elected governor, it is alleged that votes were cast for babies and dead people, illegally listed in the registration books. Such allegations have been made after previous elections, too, but legislative investigations come to naught.

Small Salary, Big Fortune.

Not the least puzzling feature of Hague's success is his ability to get rich on $6,200 yearly salary. He refuses to answer questions on this subject on the ground his privacy would be invaded. One investigator claimed Hague made $600,000 on certain real estate transactions at the expense of taxpayers. The mayor lives in a fine apartment suite in Jersey City, keeps an elaborate summer estate at Deal and (it is claimed) maintains elaborate quarters in Manhattan.

Personal banker and attorney for the mayor is John Milton, the new United States senator who succeeded Harry Moore. Himself a subject of considerable investigation, Milton admits having paid for Hague's $125,000 Deal estate. Hague, in turn, reimbursed him in cash. This trick has popped up before federal income tax agents several times but the mayor, bland as usual, refuses to have his privacy invaded.

Milton is equally suave. When investigators began nosing in his direction, he calmly announced that a few days ago he'd decided to retire and—so sorry—but all his records had unfortunately been destroyed.

What will eventually happen to this dictatorship? Undeniably, the Hague machine has a hold on its constituents that can be compared only to Huey Long's Louisiana regime a few years back. Recently, when 26 congressmen wrote Hague in protest over "wholesale arrest and deportation" of labor organizers, they received a reply that "everything is under control . . . and don't worry."

"I Am the Law!"

A few days later, irked, Mayor Hague sponsored a mass meeting attended by thousands of the faithful, one of the largest gatherings Jersey City has ever seen. There a select roster of speakers re-affirmed the community's faith in the man who says, "I am the law."

No moral can be drawn from the career of Frank Hague, because it is not yet ended. The strange feature is that boss control over Jersey City and New Jersey in general has been the vogue many years, yet it took a handful of C. I. O. organizers to bring it into the public eye.

Equally strange is the seeming efficiency with which Jersey City is governed. High taxes seem to be the only objection, and even that all-important item is sometimes forgotten by zealous Hague henchmen. The mayor himself sums up the conditions prevailing in his unusual city with the following typical speech:

"Taxes are higher here because we had to pay for progress. We were just about bankrupt 20 years ago. The city is a city now and business is beginning to pick up. But let me point out one thing about the town. The burden of taxation is being borne not by the householder and the small business man, as in other cities, but by corporations whose shoulders are broad!"

That makes 'em smile. Next time there's an election, they'll vote for Hague!

An Interesting Border for a Braided Rag Rug.

AN OLD house sitting in the midst of old fields against a background of piney woods not so far from where the Pilgrims landed. The present occupant is just as thrifty as all of her New England ancestors who have preceded her there. She still makes braided rag rugs from discarded garments and they harmonize perfectly with her lovely old furniture. One that she showed me was different than any I had ever seen. Here are all the dimensions and method of making it in case it is new to you, too, and you would like to make one like it.

The center oval part is 32 inches long and 16 inches wide with 6-inch scroll border all around. The scrolls are made in pairs from braided strips 2 3/4 yards long. These strips are braided tight so they are not more than 1/2 inch wide. The center of each strip is marked as shown here at A and the ends are then sewn around and around, working toward the center as at B. The pairs of scrolls are sewn together and also to the edge of the rug as indicated here at the lower right.

This kind of rug has infinite possibilities for color schemes. One seen had a blue center, a band of mixed color and then a wide band of red. The pairs of scrolls alternated red and blue.

BRAINS OR PUPPETS? . . . John Milton, new United States senator from New Jersey appointed to replace the new governor, A. Harry Moore (right), is a ringleader in the Hague machine and personal banker to the mayor. Moore also owes all his political success to Frank Hague.

isfactory reason for his presence on Jersey City streets, thereby landing C. I. O. organizers in the city cooler.

Today Frank Hague's well-oiled political machine depends on such unique implements as the $25,000,000 medical center (third largest in the United States and far too imposing for such a small city) and a government that is really efficient, albeit expensive. To understand this amazing situation one must examine the background, from the time young Frank Hague was an aspiring Democratic boss in Jersey City's second ward. That was in 1908.

Started as Custodian.

Unimportant, but ascending, Hague's first job was custodian of the city hall at $2,000 a year under Mayor Otto H. Wittmann. Later, as commissioner of the street and water board, he made friends both with administration forces and the lusty Commission Government league. In 1913 Hague admittedly played a "double-cross" on Witt-institution which nevertheless reeks of politics.

Let the Mayor Pay!

Any resident of Jersey City may enter this 2,000-bed hospital and receive the benefit of every medical treatment known to modern science. Providing, of course, that the patient says he is poor. But rich and poor take advantage of this unique enterprise which costs taxpayers about $900,000 a year. Of 108 discharged patients investigated recently, 30 were said to have been treated at public expense when they were able to pay for hospitalization.

"Have your baby on the mayor," is popular advice to expectant mothers since the Margaret Hague maternity hospital was opened. Yes, and have your tonsils out, or take a rest cure. But don't forget how to vote next time an election rolls around!

Elections are an important event, too. Every hour all the votes cast in each district are telephoned to Hague, who compares returns with a table showing hourly votes in the

ulu.—Deep in the wilds of New Guinea lurks a killer without a name. A party of explorers is slashing its way through the jungle, risking disease and possibly the lives of natives, determined to bring it to bay.

They intend to drag their quarry back to the bar of justice. Quite the contrary, they approve the creature's activities, for it is one of the most unobtrusive fighters by killing other insects that are harmful to his crops. The insect is an enemy of the sugar cane borer, one of the most destructive pests both in Hawaii and in the sugar area of the United States. It is hoped that it can be transplanted and acclimated first in Hawaii and then to the rest of the way to the Pacific.

Found Accidentally.

A new insect ally of sugar cane was discovered quite by accident.

A scientific exploring party sent out by the Hawaiian Planters' association, under the leadership of Cyril E. Pemberton, discovered new types of wild cane. One of them was shipwrecked on the coast.

On a forbidding and possum-infested shore, the party occupied with forays into the jungle they waited for help. They discovered a patch of cane, a swamp. Some of the men were afflicted with borers. They turned these up—and found the enemy of the pest.

During the place of discovery, the insect's descendants still will be there when they return. Mr. Pemberton and his party journeyed on to Honolulu. The preparations are being made for the insect's importation. Climatic stations established in Samoa, Fiji and Tonga, the attempt will be made to transplant it to Hawaii.

One of the strangest digressions in the world, the woman ruler of the Bolobedi tribe in the district of Letaba, Northern Rhodesia, inspired the British writer's story of the queen who secret of eternal youth.

By the present Mojadje is identical with the one about the Haggard wrote, but the still keep up the illusion of a ruler is immortal. By secret rites, of which the only partially known to the world, the control of the Bolobedi is passed from one chief to another.

ington.—High yields of alcohol already widely used and to be even more widely in the future, can be readily obtained from the Jerusalem artichoke, a tuberous plant related to the potato. Three Iowa State chemists report in Industrial Engineering Chemistry.

Lined Hogs Are Farm Development

ington.—United States Department of Agriculture scientists are trying to breed a special variety of hog which will produce medium cuts of pork. Years ago, the short, dumpy hog was most favored, but to-day relatively small hams and bacon are wanted, a medium hog is most economical.

With Danish Landrace hogs recently for the purpose of developing a hog that will give lean hams and bacon, with a good proportion of fat.

Aviation's Future Linked With Tiny Invisible Air Film

New York.—The future of aviation is linked with an invisible film of air only a few hundredths of an inch thick. So nearly perfect is the streamlining of modern airplanes that even the protruding heads of tiny rivets can cut miles an hour from the speed of a plane and greatly lower its flight performance.

The crucial air film is known as the laminar boundary layer between the wing of a plane and the air through which it flies. If the air passes smoothly over the wing all is well. If the air becomes turbulent air resistance is increased and speed and climbing ability are decreased.

Great advances in knowledge of the behavior of this invisible air boundary have been made possible by studies in wind tunnels. But now it is becoming apparent that the day may be approaching when wind tunnel tests, alone, will not be the last word in aeronautical research.

Free Flight Study Needed.

Speaking at the first Wright Brothers' Lecture of the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences here, the British air expert, Prof. B. Melville Jones of Cambridge university, pointed out that free flight study of real airplanes may soon supply the final check on research.

Flight in smooth air free from small-scale turbulence is needed, he indicated, to disclose some of the parasitic air friction losses now being studied. A slight unsteadiness may persist in wind tunnels which produces effects differing from those of actual flight.

Key point of investigations is a study of the so-called transition point where the smooth, laminar flow of air turns into the turbulent pattern that robs planes of their performance. The transition point should occur as far back on the wing, away from the leading edge, as is possible. In free flight tests, Professor Jones disclosed, a thin layer of tinfoil only one five-hundredths of an inch thick was sufficient to shift the transition point forward and produce drag.

Sunspots Affect Life on the Earth

New York.—Did you know that the best vintage wines are from crops that grow in those years when sunspots are at a maximum? And that trees show their greatest growth in periods when the surface of the sun shows the greatest number of spots? Or that the Dow-Jones stock market averages follow a curve which is very similar to curves based on sunspot numbers?

These are only a few of the many remarkable, but unexplained coincidences between the activities of plant and animal life on earth and the appearance of those gigantic electro-magnetic disturbances on the sun which man calls sunspots.

More and more scientists, and others, are probing sunspots and seeking to learn the relationship between their appearance and the multitudinous activities of earth-bound man. In his newest book, "Sunspots and Their Effect from the Human Point of View," (McGraw-Hill) Dr. Harlan True Stetson, astronomer and research associate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, summarizes the knowledge which science now has in its possession to analyze for the truth or falseness of speculation on this intriguing matter.

Dr. Stetson goes out on no limb to forecast, in so many words, a definite relationship. Rather he piles up, item by item, an imposing array of facts which offer a true challenge to those who are skeptical of the sunspot's bearing on terrestrial activity. Sunspots and their effect on human behavior, growing things, business, radio, sunlight, power, earth magnetism and even carrier pigeon flight, are presented.

Eskimo Now Wants Steel and Sweater

Washington.—Back from the far Canadian Arctic again, the missionary-botanist Pere Arthème Dutilly is sorting specimens in the laboratories of the Catholic university of America. He has brought 1,200 sheets of pressed plants, 1,000 insects, several scores of soil and mineral samples, and a large number of old-time weapons and tools of the Eskimos.

The Eskimo people, Pere Dutilly reports, are changing fast, abandoning and even making fun of the finely wrought ivory harpoons, bone needles, etc., they formerly used, and substituting steel and other metals wherever they can.

In their clothing as well the Eskimos are rapidly becoming "westernized." Older members of the family may still stick to the traditional fur parka, but the younger generation must have sweaters and even rubber-soled sneakers, at least for summer wear. Even in five years the amount of change has been notable, among the Eskimos near trading posts.

Can Spring Be Far Away?

WITH Winter almost over, March blizzards to the contrary notwithstanding, you find yourself eyeing the fashion sheets a little more than casually. Indeed you probably already have your needle threaded, just waiting for some nice Spring patterns to make your acquaintance. And here they are, three quick tricks, each pleasantly awaiting your choice, each designed to make some wardrobe happy. Which do you prefer?

Fitted Bodice.

Look your Sunday best in this graceful afternoon frock with its snug and softly shirred waistline. The skirt flares slightly to the front and emphasizes the slimness of the silhouette. Note the saddle shoulder and short, puffed sleeves—details that are unusually becoming and make for distinction. One of the new widely spaced flower patterns in rayon or silk will make your informal afternoons and evening a double delight, and the pattern is a particular joy to work with. So simple, and so pleasing.

Trim Morning Frock.

Don't be caught around the house without your best foot forward. You needn't be, with this crisp and flattering morning frock at your beck and call. Simple as pie, yet charming fresh and youthful, this model dispenses with all fussy details yet achieves an appearance which will see you through the busiest day. The skirt flares a bit from a neatly fitted waistline, and the ric-rac trim, in contrast, adds a note of brightness. Just nine pieces including the belt and pockets. Try dot-dashed swiss or a printed percale.

For the Full Figure.

This charming frock is really more than a house frock—you'll find it flattering enough and dressy enough to wear throughout the day. The slim, straight lines make every provision for comfort. The skirt has a kick pleat at front, the sleeves are full and pleated, and the neck line is just right to be very flattering. Furthermore you can make this dress, of a rayon print or gay percale, in a brief afternoon or evening, resulting in a pretty, runaround model at far less than you usually spend.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1450 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (32 to 38 bust). Size 14 (32) requires 3 3/4 yards of 39 inch material with short sleeves. Fourteen inch zipper required for front closing.

Pattern 1312 is designed for sizes 14 to 44 (32 to 44 bust). Size 16 (34) requires 3 3/4 yards of 39 inch fabric; 1 1/4 yards braid required for trimming.

Pattern 1444 is designed for sizes 36 to 52. Size 38 requires 4 3/4 yards of 35 or 39 inch material; 1/2 yard required for revers facing in contrast. Bow requires 1/2 yard ribbon.

The Drawbacks

"Dear Mrs. Pucket," a school teacher wrote to the mother of a pupil, "William was absent this morning. Will you please tell me what kept him out of school?"

"Dear Ma'am," was the reply. "William is keeping time for his father. Last night he came home with an exampel about how long would it take a man walking 3 miles an hour to walk two and a half times around a field 4 miles square. And as Willie ain't no man, we had to send his pap."

"IT OPENED MY EYES... TO REAL JOY SMOKIN'" says Al Boyes. He's talkin' about the guarantee on this milder, tastier "makin's" tobacco...

ALLEN H. (AL) BOYES (at the wheel) gives a good tip to all smokers who roll their own when he says: "That Prince Albert money-back offer opened my eyes to real joy smoking. What a difference! First, P.A. hugs the paper—rolls up fast and trim. It draws grand—burns slow, cool, and mellow. There's no harshness—yet there's plenty of good, rich taste." Well, Al, when a tobacco has the bite taken out by a special process, it's got to smoke milder—it's bound to give you real smokin' joy.

FRIEND...THERE'S NO STRINGS TO THIS MONEY-BACK OFFER...

Roll yourself 30 swell cigarettes from Prince Albert. If you don't find them the finest, tastiest roll-your-own cigarettes you ever smoked, return the pocket tin with the rest of the tobacco in it to us at any time within a month from this date, and we will refund full purchase price, plus postage. THE NATIONAL JOY SMOKE

I ROLL A FIRM, PLUMP 'MAKIN'S' CIGARETTE EVERY TIME WITH PRINCE ALBERT

YES SIR—AND IT'S GOT PLENTY OF GOOD, RICH TASTE AND BODY, YET IT'S NEVER HARSH

"WELL, blow me down, mates," chuckles J. W. Wilkie. (Excuse him for being cheery about how he rolls 'em.) "Look at this perfect 'makin's' cigarette full of mild, tasty Prince Albert smokin'."

"HUH—anybody can roll 'em that way with Prince Albert. It's crimp cut," grins Al Hendrickson. "It's made to order for neat, firm rolling—easy drawin', too. There's no bite—no bitter or raw taste."

The Words of Washington

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Again, as for many years, America pauses amid its various preoccupations to observe with reverend honor the birthday of George Washington.

How can a nation best honor the memory of the man it acknowledges as Founder and Father?

Obviously, by heeding his words of guidance and inspiration. And in the case of its great National Hero, America is fortunate in having a clear and written record of those words preserved in the famous Farewell Address.

Here are some extracts from that address, particularly applicable at a period when the principle of balanced constitutional powers, on which our government was founded, is under frequent threat.

They read:

"It is important . . . that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those entrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective Constitutional spheres, avoiding, in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another.

"The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism.

"The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the Guardian of the Public Weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them.

"If in the opinion of the People, the distribution or modification of the Constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates.

"But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed."

Those are the words of Washington, addressed to the nation and the people he loved. They remain a clear admonition to statesmen and the public today. They are the final official counsel of the patriot, soldier and statesman of whom it was written:

"Arms won battles when he spoke, And out of Chaos sprang the state." If the great state George Washington created is to continue its progress and its benefits to all the people, those words must be remembered.

In this way can America pay its highest tribute to our First National Hero.

To Win the Game...

No basketball team can be a winner by playing hard a part of the game . . . and loafing the rest of the time.

To win each player must be on the job all through the game. He must never let down.

And . . . what is true in winning a game of any kind, is true in the practice of thrift.

You can save a little money by putting aside a certain amount once or twice a year . . . but you will save a lot more, and the game of thrift, if you have a definite plan and follow it gently.

To accumulate money for a new home, for modern furnishings, or for a pleasure trip . . . start SAVING at once and with diligence. Then you will be ready for any emergency, and you'll be so situated that you can take it easy, and be comfortable, when you reach the sunset of life.

Now, if you have been spending too much up to the present time, and if you have not planned for the future . . . this bank invites you to open an account right away, and make deposits regularly. Then your future days will be much happier. Joy and contentment will be yours.

Shamrocks Triumph In Sectional Tourney

IN HARD FOUGHT BATTLE FROM SOUTHERN RIVALS

ateated Rowan And Wesley In First Round and Semi- Final Games

For the second time in as many years the Klemme High School Shamrocks, Saturday night, won the sectional tournament and earned the right to represent this section at the district tournament to be held at Mason City this week. Playing heads-up ball from the very start of the tournament the Shamrocks rolled over Rowan by a score of 42 to 23 in a game that was every man on the squad in action. Friday night, however, the Shamrocks bumped into a little tougher competition when they met Wesley five. The Klemme Shamrocks jumped into an early lead and were out in front at the quarter mark 14 to 5. In the second quarter, however, Wesley began hitting the Shamrocks and at the half the score stood at 22 to 18 in favor of the Shamrocks. The third quarter the Shamrocks picked up six points while the Shamrocks were getting free, and ran the count to 24 to 18 still in favor of Klemme. Then in the final period the Wesley Shamrocks grabbed a one-point, 26 to 18 lead, and things began to look bleak from the viewpoint of the Klemme fans on the sidelines. But the Shamrocks were not to be denied and after Trampel tied things up with a free throw, Captain Schmidt intercepted a pass, dribbled half the length of the court and kissed one off the bank and in to put the game on. The Shamrocks scored three more points and the Wesleymen were unable to make the final score read 28 to 26.

Win From Goodell

Saturday night in the finals the Shamrocks met and defeated their bitter rivals, Goodell, in a game that kept the fans howling all the while. Both teams started hitting after the opening whistle and at the end of the first quarter the Shamrocks were ahead 8 to 8. In the second quarter the Shamrocks began to show a small edge on the Goodell Shamrocks, and at the half held a 21 to 19 advantage. In the second half the Shamrocks were more or less of a ding-dong battle, with both teams doing their best to try and get a safe lead on their opposition. However, Klemme seemed to have a little bit the best of things, until in the final period when the Goodell boys went ahead one point even though playing without Boller and Latch, who left the game via the foul route earlier in the period. Trampel, Klemme forward, then banged one in to put the Shamrocks back in the lead. Immediately after this he two left the game on fouls, but Genie Kluckhohn did a nice job of filling his position. With some three minutes to play Genie slapped in a field shot and a field goal in quick succession to pull the game out of the fire for the Shamrocks. From then on it was all Klemme, and the final count was 35 to 26.

Jorgenson, Klemme center, garnered 14 points to lead his mates in the scoring, while Hofer, stellar Goodell guard, rammed in five field goals and a free throw, for 15 points. Schmidt played his usual whale of a floor game and also scored 7 points on two field goals and trio of charity tosses. He did a neat job of holding down Boller, that individual getting only 5 points, and slipped in a field goal and a free throw of his own. Grosshuesch hit the hoop for 6 points, and he also played a sweet floor game.

All of the Shamrocks played fine games in the tournament and in our opinion are deserving of championship.

Britt Won Class A Championship

Britt and Corwith won their way into the finals in the class A bracket by defeating Belmond and Garner respectively. Saturday night in the finals, however, Britt proved to be much to fast for Corwith and swamped them by a score of 42 to 22, thus earning the right to compete in class A competition at the district in Mason City this week.

JAMES LARSON MARRIES GARNER YOUNG LADY

Sunday, February 27 at 12:30 o'clock Miss Clara Belle Prouty of Garner and Mr. James Larson of Klemme were united in marriage by Rev. V. V. Schuldt of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Garner, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Prouty.

They were attended by a sister of the bride and a brother of the groom. The latter wore dark gray suits, and the bride wore a rust-colored dress with black accessories, while the bridesmaid wore a dark green dress with black accessories with a corsage of snap dragons. The bride carried a bouquet of snap dragons and daffodils.

After the ceremony a three course dinner was served to the guests.

Those attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Prouty, Maurine and Betty Lea; Mr. and Mrs. John Larson and Lenora; Mr. and Mrs. Alex Early and daughter; Mr. and Mrs. Walter Lauden and family, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Larson; Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Larson; Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Larson; Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Prouty and son, France; and Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Hutchins and daughter.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank all our friends and neighbors for their kindness, help and sympathy extended us in our recent sorrow. We also want to thank all who contributed flowers and those who took part in the services.

Mrs. Elmer Schlei and Dale.

EFFIE MAY STEWARD DIED SUNDAY EVENING

Funeral services were held this Wednesday afternoon, March 2, 1938, at the home of Anna Gibbs, for Effie May Steward, with Rev. Wm. Zabalka officiating.

Pall bearers were Harry Gibbs, Asa Gibbs, Frank E. Gibbs, Donald Gibbs, Fred J. Arnold and Asa Arnold.

Obituary

Effie May Steward was born July 26th, 1863 in Cincinnati, Ohio, the youngest of three daughters born to her parents, James Madison Steward and wife, Anna Collins.

Effie showed a marked talent for music early in life, and after completing her high school course at West Union, Ohio, completed a course in music at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. She loved music, even wrote several original compositions.

She was a member of the Presbyterian Church at West Union, Ohio, and she influenced a great many young people in the religious and musical field while at West Union.

After her mother's death she moved to Leland, Iowa, where she served the community as Post Mistress for 19½ years.

She was quite a student of the Bible and wherever she lived she usually taught a Sunday School class, and was usually the church organist.

In March, 1934, because of failing health, she resigned her position, and moved to Klemme and for 3½ years has made her home with Miss Anna Gibbs where she received the best of care, but she gradually became weaker and the end came Sunday at 8:45 P. M., February 27th, 1938.

She reached the age of 74 years, 7 months and 1 day.

She leaves to mourn her passing Her niece, Mary E. Steward and Nephew, James Madison Steward both of Columbus, Ohio; Her cousins, Miss Anna Gibbs, Mrs. F. A. Arnold and Harry Gibbs, of Klemme, Iowa, and Charles E. Gibbs of Big Lake, Minn. Also other relatives and friends in Ohio and Iowa.

Interment was beside her sister, Emma, in the cemetery at Leland.

DR. BEMIS ELECTED HEAD OF CONSERVATION LEAGUE

Fred T. Schwob Addresses Gathering Held At Garner Court House

GARNER—The organization of a county-wide conservation league was made Thursday night at the courtroom with 175 persons attending.

Fred T. Schwob, secretary of the Iowa State conservation commission, gave the main address and talked on "The Problems of Conservation in Iowa and the New Game Bird Problem." Mr. Schwob recently returned from Baltimore, Md., where he attended a meeting of the National Wildlife federation. Dr. George A. Bemis, member of the recreational committee of the Iowa State Planning board presided.

Jack Z. Stevens, of Clear Lake, game warden for this district, also took an active part in effecting the organization. Plans are contemplated for further development of the natural resources in Hancock county for the preservation of wildlife.

Officers elected are Dr. George A. Bemis, Garner, president; Oscar E. Johnson, Hancock county representative, Kanawha, first vice president; J. W. Neiz, farmer residing near Eagle Lake, second vice president; Clark E. Lovrien, Britt, secretary, and Peter S. Juhl, Crystal Lake, treasurer.

SUB-COUNTY ONE-ACT PLAY CONTEST HERE

Klemme plays host to the sub-county one-act play contest next Wednesday evening, March 9, when Garner and Goodell High Schools bring their winning plays to compete with the locals. Winners in this contest will represent this sub-division of the county in the final county contest March 16.

Garner will bring a cast of six characters, all girls, to stage the play, "Mushrooms Coming Up." Those taking part are Jean Mertz, Maurine Prouty, Gretchen Buck, Bettylou Barnes, Ruth Duesenberg and Bernice Quintus.

Goodell's play, "The Cornhusk Doll," will have the following players: Katherine McMullen, Clinton Johnson, Kenneth Boller, Helen Boller and Elroy Latch.

"The Winner" is Klemme's offering in the contest. Its cast of players consists of Raymond Jorgenson, Jr., Marian Waterman, Elaine Buntensch and Dorance Grange.

SERVICES HELD MONDAY AFTERNOON FOR U. G. SMID

Died Thursday Evening After A Short Illness

Funeral Services for U. G. Smid, 72, were held Monday afternoon at the Klemme Reformed Church, with Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch officiating.

A quartette: Edwin Thiemann, Harvey Barz, Mrs. Thada and Mrs. Dulmes sang, "The Old Rugged Cross," "Wait On God and Trust Him," and "God Be With You, Till We Meet Again."

Obituary

Udo G. Smid was born on the 29th day of January 1866 at Emden, Germany. He was baptized in Reformed Church of Emden, and after attending the religious school of his congregation he was received into the church membership by confirmation. He received his education in the public and parochial schools of Emden, and continued his studies in the Gymnasium (High School) and vocational school in his home city.

He graduated from the vocational school as a surveyor and carpenter. At the age of 21 he left his home to seek his fortune in America. He earned his passage as caretaker of a shipment of horses, from Emden to Watseka, Illinois. Soon after his arrival he found work as a carpenter at Danforth, Illinois. He was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Johnson of Danforth, December 22nd, 1897. He himself built the house in which they made their home. In 1908 Mr. Smid bought a 40 acre farm near Reynolds, Indiana. After one year at Reynolds the family moved to West Bend, Iowa, where he again followed the carpenter trade. In 1909 he bought an 80 acre farm at Westgate, Iowa. After three years he moved to Belmond with his family, where he again found employment as carpenter and surveyor. In the fall of the same year, 1912, he bought a farm 1 mile southeast of Klemme, where the family resided until 1928, when they moved to Klemme. Four sons and three daughters were born to Mr. and Mrs. Smid. One died in infancy and one daughter, Janette, preceded her father in death in 1925.

Mr. Smid was interested in the religious education of his children who were all instructed and confirmed in the Klemme Reformed Church. Mr. Smid attended the German services of the church as long as his health permitted.

Mr. Smid understood what the poet meant when he wrote: "How dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood." He visited his home at Emden, Germany four times after coming to America, 1893, 1908, 1925 and 1931.

On his first trip he returned with a shipment of horses that were to be exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago. To his heart's delight one of these horses won first prize.

For many years Mr. Smid was agent for the Hancock County Mutual Insurance Company. He had many friends and enjoyed the respect and freindship of all of them.

During the last years he gradually failed in health, and after a few days illness, he quietly fell asleep Thursday evening, Feb. 24, at about 6:30 o'clock, at the age of 72 years and 25 days.

Surviving him and mourning his death are his widow, his children: Bernhard, Mrs. Emery Schaefer, Gerhardine, Otto of California and Henry; Two brothers: Henry of Joliet, Ill. and Gerhardt of Watseka, Ill.; Four grandchildren, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Emery Schaefer.

Burial was made in Calvery cemetery at Klemme.

Out of town relatives who attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Geo. H. Reighel of Gilman, Illinois, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson of Kankakee, Illinois, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. G. Johnson and daughter of Jackson, Minnesota, and Mr. Hibbo Ohling of Ventura.

MOVING LIST

Moving Changes Made In And Around Klemme

There have been a number of moving changes made in and around Klemme the past week and the Times will attempt to cover the most of them in this week's paper.

Bernard Pringnitz will move on to the farm vacated by Walter Blumer. Walter Blumer moves to the farm vacated by Stewart Heivilin (Tice Farm) and Stewart Heivilin moves back on the farm with Art Johnson.

Rhine Schlawin moves to a farm near Hayfield, and Floyd Greimann moves on to the farm vacated by Schlawin. (His mother's farm.)

Carl Pierson moves to the farm vacated by John Lass, and John Lass moves to the farm which purchased where E. J. Nelson has been living. Nelson moved Garden City. Karis Kropp moves on to the farm vacated by Pierson and John Lemke purchased the farm vacated by Kropp. (The old Blumer farm.) Bill Langlitz moves on to the Bill Beier farm vacated by Lemke.

Butch Merkel moves on the Frank Sandry farm and Frank Sandry moves to his sister's farm, the Marion Rust farm. Mrs. Rust had a sale and Russell Bell moves to the George Mikes farm.

Erwin Priebe moves from town to the Priebe farm. Paul Goll, who has lived there, purchased the farm vacated by Wm. Baack and Wm. Baack moves over near Nora Springs. Awalt Jahne moves to the house in town vacated by Priebe. (Dr. Anderson house.) Ostenkamp family moves back to Klemme to the C. A. Larsen farm, vacated by Jahne.

John Terhufen moves to a farm north of Floyd and a young man from near Kanawha moves to the farm vacated by Terhufen.

Truels Steffen moves on to the Kraus farm, which was vacated by Tanners some time ago.

Kenneth Zwald moves two miles east of Garner on a farm and Ben Nieman goes on to the farm vacated by Zwald. (Lau estate farm.)

Oscar Durham and wife move to Goodell and work for Harry Carpenter and Ed. Medaus purchased a house in Garner and had it moved to a lot on Morningside.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to take this means of extending our sincere thanks to everyone who assisted us, and who offered their sympathy in our recent sorrow. We are grateful for the flowers and acts of kindness.

Mrs. U. G. Smid and family.
Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Schaefer and family.

Farmers Union Meeting

Liberty Farmers Union Local will meet at the Liberty No. 7 school house on Tuesday evening, March 8. The school house is 1¼ miles west of Klemme.

A special program with music and a speaker has been arranged for the evening.

Everyone is invited to attend.

Before an election the voters hang on the candidate's words after the election they hang his words on him.

Some Bitterness in Nearly Every Drink Liked by Americans

By ROBERT D. POTTER

Washington.—At least in the realm of beverages it's a bitter world after all. Think back through the liquids you drink during a day. Such a list might well include tomato juice, orange juice, pineapple juice, or grapefruit juice for breakfast. Then water, tea, coffee, milk, chocolate milk, soft drinks, and possibly beer, wines, other alcoholic beverages.

Not that any one person would drink all of these beverages during a single day or even in a lifetime, but they represent a cross section of what some Americans do drink, each to his inclinations. Of all these milk and water are about the only ones which do not have a tinge of bitterness.

The Industrial Bulletin of Arthur D. Little, Inc., points out that some people like their milk with chocolate flavor, which is bitter. Coffee and coffee substitutes are bitter and "burnt" flavored. Tea is bitter and astringent; cocoa is bitter and aromatic; tomato and the citrus juices and many "soft" drinks are bitter and sour. Beer, says the Bulletin, is outstandingly bitter.

Breakfast Very Bitter.

Bitter, indeed, is America's quick breakfast of bitter grapefruit, bitter coffee and bitter orange marmalade although, in truth, sweetness is added to tone down the bitterness.

Actually bitterness—as one of the four fundamental tastes—has to be included in all highly-seasoned foods and drinks. "There is a sound physiological basis," states the Bulletin, "for table condiments including sugar for sweetness, salt for saltiness, vinegar or lemon juice for sour tang, and meat sauces, pepper and mustard competing for use in imparting bitterness."

There is the old belief—now not so well regarded as it was a generation ago—that bitters stimulate the appetite. The vogue of "stomach bitters," which provided a boon for proprietary medicines, was the result. It has never been disclosed, however, how much the alcoholic content of these "bitters" influenced zealous teetotalers to use them.

Alphabet Wasn't Invented by Cadmus of Phoenicia

Philadelphia.—Phoenician Cadmus, popular hero credited with fathering our alphabet, never existed, so far as archeologists can learn. We should honor some unknown Phoenician for teaching the Greeks ABCs, and the alphabet idea is older than Phoenicians anyway.

Reporting latest views on the still-mysterious alphabet, Dr. John Day of Barnard college told the Archeological Institute of America here that Greeks probably derived the alphabet from Phoenicians about the middle of the Ninth century B. C. Dr. Day succeeded in narrowing down the date by demonstrating from old inscriptions that five of the Greek letters could not have evolved later than the Ninth century, and five other Greek letters could not have evolved earlier. Questioning the recent assertion by "an eminent authority," that Cadmus lived about 1400 B. C., Dr. Day pointed out that when archeologists dug at the citadel of Thebes, Greek town supposedly founded by Cadmus, they found no trace of Phoenician relics or Phoenician writings.

"We must conclude," he declared, "that the only definite historical element contained in the legend concerning the letters of Cadmus is the fact of the Phoenician origin of the Greek alphabet."

Phoenicians are no longer credited with inventing the alphabet outright, discoveries of old inscriptions having revealed that our alphabet is derived from the Roman, which came from the Greek, which borrowed from the Phoenician, which evolved from letter forms either in Syria to the north or Sinai to the south.

Illite Is New Mineral That Resembles Mica

Urbana, Ill.—Illite, a mica-like mineral, resembling ordinary mica, but occurring in sedimentary rocks, is announced as a new mineral by Drs. R. E. Grim, R. H. Bray, and W. F. Bradley, of the Illinois geological survey, reporting in the American Mineralogist.

Long mistaken for other minerals which it resembles, Illite has been called mica, sericite, hydro-mica and glimmeron. Now, as a result of an exhaustive study, in which an X-ray determination of the crystalline structure was made, Illite is found to be a new mineral.

Mysteries of Brain Probed by Scalpel of Modern Surgeon

Indianapolis.—The mysteries of life, death, and consciousness have been probed by the surgeon's scalpel and electrical impulses in the brain itself.

The seat of human consciousness and with it the ability to speak is located in the brain's artery in the left front side of the head, Dr. William H. Thompson, of the Municipal University of Omaha, told the American Association for the Advancement of Science here, after reviewing heroic operations performed by brain surgeons. Amazingly large amounts of a person's brain can be removed if necessary without seemingly affecting his ability to lead a normal life and carry on his business.

The right cerebral hemisphere of the brain, for instance, has been removed with no observable permanent loss of the higher mental processes. Surgeon's knives have whittled away other portions of human gray matter, previously thought essential in the control of mental functions, and the patients hardly knew anything had happened to them.

This Area Is Vital.

But if the left anterior cerebral artery is injured by any chance, Dr. Thompson warned, the patient can never regain consciousness. This area and the flow of blood seems linked with the problem of conscious existence itself. Scientists are now searching for some practical way of studying these new aspects of the age-old problem of relationship between mind and body.

To the mysteries of the pulsating electrical impulses beaten out of the brain, death itself has given a clue. Dr. P. S. Shurrager of the University of Illinois reported that the origin of the brain waves is shown in the records of the death process.

In the democracy of death the lower creatures such as fish, frog and toad become like the higher animals, the guinea pig, cat and dog, in the electrical responses of their brains. From this fact, Dr. Shurrager infers that the brain's electrical waves have their origin in the very life processes of the cells of the brain.

Each single cell in the brain may in the course of its life process create electrical impulses which are added together algebraically to create the complex brain waves broadcast from the brain's surface, Dr. Shurrager indicated.

Third Rate Diets Eaten by Many U. S. Families

Washington.—Many an American family that would not buy second-hand furniture or wear second-hand clothes is eating a third-rate diet. This is apparent from a survey of typical food expenditures made by Dr. Hazel K. Stiebeling of the United States bureau of home economics. The survey included 25,000 representative city, village and rural families.

Size of the family pocket-book was not the only or perhaps even the chief factor responsible for the poor nutritional quality of the family's diet. At every expenditure level above $100 per person per year, some families were able to provide themselves with very good diets. The reason more families do not get good diets is chiefly because they do not know how to select the most nourishing foods for the money.

As might be expected, the tables of the well-to-do families were more frequently and more liberally supplied with milk, butter, eggs, fruits and green and leafy vegetables.

Families spending less than $85 per year per person for food, as might also be expected, got very poor diets.

At the median expenditure level, however, which is $130 per person per year, almost one-half were eating a third-rate diet and nearly another fifth a very poor diet. At this expenditure level a little over one-fifth of the families had a first-rate diet.

Three-fourths of the families were at the $100 or more expenditure level but less than one-third of them were selecting very good diets.

Methyl Bromide Is New Weapon Against Insects

Indianapolis.—Chemical science has equipped man with a new weapon for use in his unending war of defense against insect hordes, Dr. Harold H. Shepard and Frank W. Fisk of the Minnesota university farm, St. Paul, announced to the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

The name of the compound is methyl bromide. It combines bromine, one of the earlier-ried of the war gases, with the radicle that makes wood alcohol the unsafe stuff it is for internal application.

Methyl bromide seems to be good for use against insect pests on a number of fronts. It can be used for seed disinfection, for it kills the bugs and does not harm the seed. It can be used for various kinds of fumigation, with effects comparable to those of hydrocyanic acid, yet it does not linger on, even as a bad smell. The presence of moisture seems to make it more effective.

Workmen put into place one of the panels over the window to complete a section of a wall in a "pre-fabricated" house. Ten of these "streamlined" modern homes are being built on government land at Greenbelt, Md., by private capital in co-operation with the government as a possible solution to the nation's housing problem. Port of 10 Million Americans Nears Another Year's Climax With Two Important National Tournaments

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Bowling, the ancient sport with 10,000,000 American participants, nears its climax for another season. From Brooklyn to Main Street pin boys are busier than ever with the game that changed America from a country of spectators to one of participants.

Forgotten is the unsavory reputation that once made bowling the sport of saloon hangers-on. As early as 1900 the more genteel folk began kegling and by 1905 women were active participants. Subsequent development was slow until five or six years ago when bowling zoomed to ace-high popularity.

Climaxing the current season are two nation-wide tournaments drawing 250,000 participants, the $34,000 Red Crown Sweepstakes and the thirtieth annual tournament of the American Bowling Congress, governing body of bowling.

The sweepstakes, with week-end prizes totaling $24,600 and grand prizes of $9,400, has brought out 232,000 enthusiasts, a world record for any sports event. These people are now lining up competitive scores in bowling towns all over the country.

Prizes of grand prizes will be announced shortly after March 6.

Competition Grows.

Pre-thousand teams will enter the ABC tourney at Chicago during March and April. Something like $100,000 in prizes furnishes incentive for bowlers to try to break the membership spurted from 10,000 in 1936 to 60,000 in 1937, a very good indication of the trend.

One of the best reasons for enjoying the game was given by Jack Dempsey, once prominent in another field of sports. Said Mr. Dempsey: "The main thing I like about bowling is that when you knock the pins down they stay down."

Dempsey, you may recall, had a trouble keeping a fellow named Dempsey down in a Chicago ring a few years back.

The satisfaction of knocking the pins out of ten innocent pins at the other end of the alley undoubtedly accounts for much of bowling's popularity. Unlike other sports, anyone can be nominally successful on the alleys, which also helps.

Women like it for several reasons. They're deserting bridge clubs because one can make more social contacts on the alleys. They find the game "fascinating," and it's one of the few winter sports open to women. Anyway, it's being played nowadays so why not join the crowd?

Exercise and Relaxation.

Men also like the social contacts they make at the alleys but there's even more important factor for the business men who can't indulge in strenuous athletics. Bowling is hard work—don't get us wrong—there's a chance for relaxation between bouts with the ball.

Historians tell us bowling is the oldest sport, dating back to ancient days. In that misty period of time age sportsmen were heaving boulders at piles of rock, the purpose being to sharpen one's aim before going hunting. A few centuries later Sir Francis Drake is supposed to have defeated the Spanish Armada and saved England because he was filled with confidence—confidence instilled by a successful game of bowling just before he took to sea.

The modern game is related to the pins, originated by the Dutch and brought by them to Manhattan in 1623. New York's famous bowling Green was their first rendezvous before nine-pins became a year-round game and had to be moved indoors.

Paradoxically, bowling took a new lease on life through legislation enacted to stamp it out. In the Seventeenth century New England Puritan fathers banned nine-pins because it wasn't elevating. So the game decided to add another pin and beat the law.

Toss It and Wait.

The game is really simple and one can leave your inferiority complex at home. It's merely a matter of tossing a 16-pound mineralite ball down a glass-smooth alley at neatly arranged pins that are just waiting to be knocked down the gutter. Your first toss may very possibly be as successful as that of a seasoned player.

There is no physical hazard. Barring persons with ailments prohibiting any exertion, there is no muscular prerequisite. Often people with physical handicaps become amazingly proficient and blind bowlers are far from uncommon. In a recent New York match between a blind team and another group with normal vision, the blind bowlers lost by a mere 16 points.

Balls are fashioned to fit any hand. The usual type is bored with a thumb hole and two finger grips. Primo Carnera's ball carries the largest grip ever made; the finger span is five and one-eighth inches.

A perfect score is 300 points, requiring 12 successive "strikes." A leaves two or more pins standing with the intervening pins knocked down.

You needn't develop a "form" to look at home on the alleys. Some people walk up to the line, take a couple of weak swings and let their ball roll slowly down the alley; others—the more deliberate bowlers—get as long a running start as possible, then try to slam the ball through the opposite end of the building.

Karl Keyerleber of the Cleveland Plain Dealer recently visited a bowling alley and returned to compile the following classification of bowling forms:

"They include the dying swans who collapse on the alley after each roll, the kickers who almost lose a shoe as one foot goes after the ball, the bouncers who make alley owners tear their hair by dropping the ball on the middle of the alley, the mowers who try to sweep the pins over by remote control with a mighty thrashing of the arms after delivering the ball, the wavers who blow them down with their hands, the straight-ball addicts, the boys who 'bend' them and those who back them up."

Cleveland, incidentally, is among America's top-rank bowling cities, boasting Harvey Braatz and Mrs. Joan Radtkin, holders, respectively, of men's and women's world championships for three games.

Pressure Is Heavy.

Braatz made his record by rolling 276, 300 and 288, the hottest three-game stretch ever recorded in league competition under ABC standards. We mentioned awhile back how unusual a 300 score is. The perfect score is "par" to a bowler, but it's much harder than par in golf. On the links you can slip now and then, recouping your losses with a few exceptional shots. But "par" bowling must be perfect bowling from start to finish; the kegler must toss 12 straight balls correctly and the pressure gets pretty strong about the ninth or tenth ball!

Bowling is much like golf in its appeal to your "never-say-die" instincts. After a few weeks of poor trundling you may throw five or six Comely Alice Faye is reputed to be one of Hollywood's most enthusiastic bowlers, but the press agent who arranged this picture neglected to remind Alice that she shouldn't step over the black line. Below: Mont Lindsey of New Haven, Conn., one of the all-time high ABC bowlers, talks it over with Jack Dempsey of heavyweight fame, also a trundling expert.

Historic Hoaxes

The Gold Machine

ALCHEMY, the professed art of transmuting baser metals into gold, has been one of man's dreams for ages. But it remained for a Connecticut Yankee to give it a practical application which, metaphorically speaking, lined his pockets with $200,000 worth of gold obtained from credulous investors in his "gold accumulator."

This was the invention of Prescott Ford Jernegan, once a minister of Middletown, Conn., who interested Arthur W. Ryan, a jeweler, in his plan for extracting gold from sea water. In February, 1897, Jernegan lowered into Narragansett bay in Rhode Island, his "gold accumulator," a flat box containing a small battery, quicksilver and other chemicals and constructed so that the sea water flowed over the quicksilver. When the box was raised 24 hours later what appeared to be gold was discovered in place of the quicksilver and the jeweler's tests proved to his satisfaction that it was real gold—$2 worth.

So he joined with Jernegan in forming a company and selling $500,000 in stock. A plant was built at Lubec, Maine, and the two "accumulators" began bringing up increasing amounts of gold. This went on for more than a year. Then in July, 1898, Jernegan went to Europe and at the same time an employee named Charles E. Fisher disappeared. The "accumulators" ceased to produce gold, for the very good reason that Fisher, who was a professional diver, had been placing the precious metal in them before they were brought to the surface.

When the fraud was exposed, the directors of the company who had been made victims of the fake, gave back the profits they had made and eventually the stockholders recovered about 36 per cent of their investment. There was some talk of trying to extradite Jernegan from Europe, where he was living off the $200,000 he had obtained from investors, but nothing ever came of it.

Nature Faker Par Excellence

THE modern champion of all writers of nature fakes was undoubtedly "Lester Green," of Prospect, Conn. No matter how preposterous his yarns, which several metropolitan newspapers printed for the amusement of their readers, there have always been some people who have believed them.

When he told how a setting of hen's eggs, which he had found in a block of ice taken from a flooded meadow, hatched out chickens covered with fur instead of feathers, a Canadian farmer wrote to him and wanted to buy some.

When he declared he had discovered the fluid responsible for the curl in pigs' tails and his wife had obtained beautiful permanent waves by rubbing it on her hair, "Mrs. Green" was flooded with requests from women for samples of this magic fluid.

When he told of spraying his apple trees with glue, which not only prevented the apples from falling but also preserved them in a fresh condition on the trees throughout the winter, both American and Canadian glue manufacturers wrote to ask what kind of glue he used, hoping to get a good "testimonial." One Boston firm even sent a representative to Prospect to investigate his stunt.

And these are only a very few of the marvelous achievements of "Lester Green" who was, by the way, the brain child of C. Louis Mortison, Prospect correspondent for the Waterbury (Conn.) Republican-American.

Spectrist Poetry

DURING the second decade of the present century there was a sudden growth of new "schools" of poetry and art, among them such cults as Futurism, Vorticism, Cubism, Dadaism and Polyphonic Prose.

So in 1916 when the publication of "Spectra: a Book of Poetic Experiments" was announced, it was hailed with delight by the "emancipated souls" who were struggling for new methods of self-expression. The authors of this volume were "Anne Knish" and "Emanuel Morgan" and immediately they had a host of imitators who wrote the new Spectrist poetry. Nobody could understand it, of course, but that made it seem all the more important.

Then the whole movement was revealed as a hoax which had been fathered by two authentic poets, Witter Bynner and Arthur Davidson Ficke, who used this method to satirize the current fad in new poetic cults. But, in a sense, the joke was on them. For those who had been duped and had become devotees of "Spectrism" insisted upon continuing to write their verses in that form and to perpetuate the new "movement," which still flourished among some of America's intelligentsia.

Lesson for March 6

SERVING WITH WHAT WE HAVE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Such as I have give I thee.—Acts 3:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Went Home to Nazareth.

JUNIOR TOPIC—On a Journey for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Serving With What We Have.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Serving With What We Have.

One of the difficulties we mortals face in dealing with spiritual things is that we interpret things in the realm of the spirit according to the principles and measurements of the physical world. We are quick to say "We cannot" on the basis of logical human reasoning, when an appreciation of the power of God operative on our behalf would enable us to say "We can," and having left God out of our thinking we find that indeed we cannot.

The lesson before us presents two pictures from our Lord's second visit to his home country, Nazareth. On His first visit they had tried to thrust Him over the precipice, and He in all the glory and poise of the Son of God had walked through their midst and gone His way. Now He comes again with His disciples. We then see how His home folk virtually made the power of the omnipotent God impotent because of their unbelief. On the other hand we see the weakness of men made mighty because of obedience to the command of God.

I. The Paralysis of Unbelief (vv. 1-6).

The world, the flesh, and the devil have brought forth a dark list of wicked things, but perhaps the most destructive and distressing of all is the foundation sin of unbelief. When we think back to the underlying reason for any sin or weakness in man it will be found that there is a failure to believe God. Men do not believe what He says about sin and its penalty, nor do they believe Him when He offers them grace and strength for victory.

At Nazareth the unbelief which limited the Son of God revealed itself in two questions—

1. "Whence hath this man these things?" (v. 2).

They could not deny His mighty works so they turn their attack on His person. "Is not this the carpenter?" (v. 3). Essentially this was envy, "the difficulty of acknowledging the superiority over themselves of one of their own number" . . . (Morgan).

We are ashamed of the attitude of the men of Nazareth, but we follow in their footsteps. Heavy among the burdens a Christian worker must bear is the unbelief and ridicule of his own people. Because a man has sold us groceries, or painted our house or driven a taxi in our town we cannot see how he could ever be a preacher or a missionary. Well, he can, and it is such folk that God often calls.

2. "What is this wisdom?" (v. 2).

The wisdom of Jesus was the wisdom of God (John 7:16). But how could they know that? How can we know? In John 7:17 Jesus gave the answer: "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." We see then that the reason for their unbelief was really an unwillingness to do the will of God. The controlling motive of their life was wrong. Had they been moved by a desire to do God's will, and a purpose to live in accordance therewith (even though there might have been failure in that earnest effort), they would have known that Jesus had His wisdom from God.

II. The Power of Divine Commission (vv. 7-13).

Just as unbelief hinders even the Son of God, so faith in God and obedience to His command makes of weak and poorly equipped men the mighty servants of God. In fact, their very dependence on Him for all things sets them free to devote themselves fully to the ministry of preaching and healing.

Note that they went "two by two." We have forgotten that divine plan, and often send men into remote and dangerous pioneer work—alone. Man needs fellowship; he needs counsel and control.

Consider also how they were to learn to trust God for their daily sustenance (vv. 8,9). They suffered no lack (see Luke 22:35). These rules for the life of religious workers were modified later (Luke 22:36), but the principle remains the same—the man or woman who is not ready to depend on God for everything had better not set out to follow Him. It is a blessed and delightful life!

Resisting Interference

It is sometimes pretty hard to do something you feel is right against the interference of all the world and her little brother. Sometimes it's a good thing to say "right or wrong, that's my story, and I'm going to stick to it," no matter how many well-meaning friends may advise otherwise.—Ouisse Vapel.

WHEN COLDS BRING SORE THROAT

Relieves THROAT PAIN RAWNESS

Enters Body through Stomach and Intestines to Ease Pain

The speed with which Bayer tablets act in relieving the distressing symptoms of colds and accompanying sore throat is utterly amazing . . . and the treatment is simple and pleasant. This is all you do. Crush and dissolve three genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets in one-third glass of water. Then gargle with this mixture twice, holding your head well back.

This medicinal gargle will act almost like a local anesthetic on the sore, irritated membrane of your throat. Pain ceases promptly; rawness is relieved.

You will say it is remarkable. And the few cents it costs effects a big saving over expensive "throat gargles" and strong medicines. And when you buy, see that you get genuine BAYER ASPIRIN.

ARE YOU ALL NERVES?

Mason City, Iowa — Mrs. Lillian Pence, 604 N. Mass. Ave., says: "I was made miserable by 'nerves'—a little noise would completely upset me. I scarcely slept at night, never cared to eat, and was so tired. Dr. Ficke's Favorite Prescription helped me in every way. I became stronger, my appetite improved and I slept well. Ask your druggist today for it in liquid or tablets."

MAGIC CARPET

It doesn't matter what you're thinking of buying—a barbie or a baby grand, a new suit for Junior or a set of dining-room furniture—the best place to start your shopping "tour" is in an easy-chair, with an open newspaper. The turn of a page will carry you as swiftly as the magic carpet of the Arabian Nights, from one end of the shopping district to the other. You can rely on modern advertising as a guide to good values, you can compare prices and styles, fabrics and finishes, just as though you were standing in a store. Make a habit of reading the advertisements in this paper every week. They can save you time, energy and money.

SPORTS CHATTER
(by "Flash")

Prof. gave a little talk on the tournament at the pep meeting before the Wesley game. He said that if the Shamrocks would lose it would be the last game for four of our senior boys. He wanted everyone that was at the tournament to put a lot of pep in the yells for that would help the boys. Kluckhohn better remember where he leaves his shoes or next time he will have to play barefooted. The manager should tie a string around his finger so he won't forget the suits next time. Can you guess what we say when we go into our huddle?

MUSIC NEWS

On February 19, the final session of a series of ten Bandmasters' Clinics, which Mr. Elstad had been attending was held at Mason City. Part of this session was composed of a band made up of students from the schools in various towns in northern Iowa and southern Minnesota. Twenty-eight towns were represented and there were about one hundred and thirty-five students in the band. Four of the members of our high school band were in this large band. They were Paul Schultdt, clarinetist; Billy Zabilka, clarinetist; Marian Waterman, snaredrummer, and Elaine Buntenbach, trombonist. After rehearsing from one o'clock until 3:30, the band broadcasted over KGLO.

Band members from Klemme who were over to Mason City to listen to the broadcast and the rehearsal, are Jacqueline Kudje, Irene Spitler, Dorance Grange and Elsie Ward. Mr. Elstad and Mr. Galbreth were there also.

The band was under the direction of Carleton Lee Stewart, director of the Mason City High School band. The band broadcasted three pieces. They were: "Arabia Nights," "His Honor" and a march by Sousa.

Mr. Elstad Attends Music Clinic

Mr. Elstad attended two days of the national music clinic for region two, which includes Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Wisconsin. It was held at the University of Minnesota in Minneapolis, Feb. 24, 25 and 26. The clinic was sponsored by the Minnesota Bandmasters' Association and all instrumental and vocal music educators were invited. The program included rehearsals of outstanding organizations under the direction of distinguished conductors, playing and singing of the required and selective contest numbers, open rehearsals of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra under the direction of the world renowned Dimitri Mitropoulis, discussion by prominent leaders on topics of interest to all music educators and concerts by outstanding choruses, bands and orchestras.

Music Contest At Belmond

The sub-district music contest will be held at Belmond, March 17, 18, 19. Klemme is to be one of the entrants and will be represented by the following people in the various vocal and instrumental activities:

Evelyn Arnold, Dorothy Baack, Edith Bachman, Avis Barz, Doris Barz, Novella Beier, Julia Bell, Arlene Blickenderfer, Ruth Blickenderfer, Elaine Buntenbach, Gladys Griffen, Shirley Johnson, Jacqueline Kudje, Marjorie Lemke, Juanita Pavey, Ruth Ridder, Edna Spitler, Irene Spitler, Ruth Stille, Maxine Stokesbary, Elsie Thiemann, Elsie Ward, M. Waterman, Adala Wille and Irene Becker.

Allen Barz, Frederick Bell, Melvin Coobs, Ronald Gibbs, Dorance Grange, Billy Grosshuesch, Ruben Grosshuesch, Dwaine Johnson, Ray Jorgensen, Jr. Eugene Kluckhohn, Verner Lau, Glenn Lewis, Lester Neuberger, Paul Schultdt, Marvin Stokesbary, Harold Swalve, Raymond Swalve, Elmer Trampel, Dwaine Trees, Harold Wicks, Raymond Wille and Morris Neuhring. There will be a girls' glee club, a mixed chorus, the band and several solo numbers entered from Klemme, and all the music students look forward with pleasure to the coming contest.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

Last week in typing class La Rayne Stille made 40 words with only one error in a five-minute speed test.

La Rayne Stille is the first person to make a perfect paper in a ten-minute test. Doris Johnson made 35 words with five errors and Ruben Grosshuesch made 31 words with three errors in ten-minute tests.

The typing class entered the "Iowa Every Pupil Typing Contest." We took the test Tuesday March 1st. The papers were checked and sent to Iowa State Teachers College.

The Business Training class is ready to start the unit on "Financing."

The sophomore class has formed a club in English class. The name of it is "Curiosity Club." We elected temporary officers who are as follows: President, Dorance Grange; Vice President, Marvina Lemke; Secretary, Margie Blummer. We have elected two committees, one for planning our program and the other one for drawing up the constitution and by-laws. Later we will elect our permanent officers after we have voted on our constitution.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2

Joyce Beatty went to Chicago on Friday. She is going to visit her Daddy.

The second graders are reading new books. We are going to read the story of "The Tar Baby." Maybe we will play the story.

We played a new game this week. It is a "Radio Health Game." On Monday we made up two poems. One is about "New Hats" and one is "Frosting in a Pan." There are flowers on the bulbs in our bulb bowl now.

GRADES 3 AND 4

We are sorry that Miss Azeltine has the scarlet fever. We hope that she will be able to be back soon.

Velma and Esther Tiggeman are back in school again and we have had perfect attendance the last two days.

Both grades took self-testing drills last week and each had a score of average.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Julia Bell and Edward Barz—Reporters

We are having six weeks tests this week. There are only twelve weeks of school left.

Robert Tiggeman has been absent but is back in school now.

Lawrence, Julia, Corrine, Ewald, Patricia, Edward, Herbert S. and Junior had perfect scores in spelling last week.

We have cut free-hand silhouette pictures of Washington and Lincoln. We cut them out of white paper and mounted them on colored paper.

Edward treated everyone in our room on Thursday afternoon, Feb. 24th. It was his birthday.

GRADES 7 AND 8

Those who have not been tardy or absent this six weeks are: Betty Etchen, Billy Grosshuesch, Eugene Haberkamp, Elwyn Jacobs, Robert Jahnke, Dean Merkel, Charles Bock, Lorraine Buntenbach, Arlene Buseman, Melvin Coobs, Lucille Hartbeck, Russell Wade and Billy Zabilka.

Edwin Tiggeman has been absent this week because he has tonsillitis. We had a fruit shower on him. Billy Zabilka was chosen as reporter for our school paper. Charles Bock, Melvin Coobs and Billy Zabilka received one hundred per cent in their six weeks spelling test.

On Wednesday we had physical training with Miss Irvine's room.

WILLIAM BLICKENDERFER, 81, DIED SATURDAY EVE.

Had Lived in Klemme Territory For 24 Years

Funeral services, in charge of Arthur Wellemeier, funeral director, were held Tuesday afternoon at 1.30 o'clock from the Methodist Church in Klemme, for William Blickenderfer, 81, with Dr. William Zabalka officiating.

Obituary

William Allen Blickenderfer was born January 25, 1857 on a farm near Sharron, Ohio, the youngest of two sons born to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Blickenderfer.

His father died when William was two years old. The family having no means of support, the two boys were given away to strangers and the mother married again.

His brother, Louis, age four, was given to a family in Iowa and William, age two, was given to a family of truck gardeners, who lived in New Philadelphia, Ohio.

Since the parting of these brothers, they met only once. This was about fifty years ago, and at the present time they do not know the whereabouts of the brother Louis.

These truck gardeners, whose name we do not know, were kind hearted people. They sent William to school and he took the course of study in the common rural schools of New Philadelphia, Ohio, and it is said he enjoyed school work and was above the average in scholarship.

They also took William to Church. They were members of the Moravian Lutheran Church.

At the age of thirteen he was considered grown, and strated out into the world as a farm hand working wherever he could find a job.

At the age of nineteen he came to Freeport, Ill., and worked for Dr. Scott as manager of his farm and he drove at times for the Dr. While here, at the of twenty-one, he married Callie Gilgen. They continued to work for the Dr. for three years more after which they moved to a farm which he had purchased west of Dows, Iowa. Here their daughter, Ida May, was born.

But, after sixteen years of married life, misfortune again visited him—His wife died and was buried in Mount Hope Cemetery near Dows, Iowa.

On Thanksgiving day, 1893, William Blickenderfer and Ida Snuggins were married at the home of the bride's mother, near Dows. Here their son, Arley, was born, and they also welcomed to their home the daughter of the first marriage, Ida May.

While here, the deceased joined the Vernon Center Methodist Church, was a regular member and for some years was a Sunday School teacher there. He never transferred his membership from this Vernon Center Church.

In the Spring of 1914, after living on the Dows farm 21 years, he moved northwest of Garner, where the family lived 17 years. But the depression hit them and they lost this farm and since 1931 have lived on a rented farm 10 miles east of Klemme.

William Blickenderfer was a strong man physically. Always in good health until the last year, when the physical machine, his body, gradually wore out. The end came Saturday evening, February 26th, 1938, while visiting at the home of his son, Arley, in Klemme.

He reached the age of 81 years, 1 month and 1 day.

He leaves to mourn his passing

Besides his wife, his son, Arley, of Klemme; Two grandchildren from his daughter, Ida May, Hazel and Eugene, of Los Angeles, California; Five grandchildren from his son, Arley, Ruth, Arlene, Homer, Betty and Rogen; Also two children whom he gave a home, Clifford Keough, at home, and Mrs. Leland Long, Thornton, and other relatives and friends.

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Too Many Laws

Washington.—It always has been interesting to me to see how politicians frequently overlook real issues in national affairs. Many times they stimulate the hound that overruns the rabbits. That is the reason why so often a new man in public life suddenly rises to leadership. He has taken hold of a bad situation that is right under our feet, offered a constructive solution and has dealt with an imminent condition rather than schemed for re-election through political fence building.

These facts lead directly into a bit of current history. It will be recalled how Bruce Barton campaigned through congested sections of New York's Manhattan island for an unexpired term in the house of representatives last fall. About all that Mr. Barton said of consequence in his campaign speeches was that there are too many laws. I think that is obvious. When he was campaigning on that line, he was speaking for great masses of inarticulate citizens.

But Mr. Barton went further. He announced his intention to seek repeal of one federal law a week until there is some semblance of reason in the structure of federal laws.

Now, of course, Mr. Barton is very new in politics. He had been keeping his nose to the grindstone of business. He knew only what other persons outside of politics knew, namely, that high pressure minorities, sour pussies and nit wits were getting one law after another through congress, and that, in the end, those laws would be ruinous to the country as a whole. Whether Mr. Barton thought he would succeed or whether he recognized the fact that he was only making a start, it does not matter. Bruce Barton has taken hold of an obvious issue in national affairs and it is not outside of the realm of probabilities that he will "go places" with his program. Thus far, it must be said that Mr. Barton has succeeded only in getting a dozen repeal bills into the house committees through introduction in the house. None has been acted on. Few probably will be acted on—if the house runs true to form. That is to say, Mr. Barton is a Republican and the house is controlled by Democrats and New Dealers. Naturally, they will give no opportunity for the opposition to gain credit for anything, no concessions at all.

The significance of the Barton program goes much deeper, however, and it is of that significance that I want to write. Through more than twenty years as an observer of national affairs here in Washington, obviously I have witnessed many issues develop, or be created, or be discovered. It seems to me that the really important national issues are those that develop, as the Barton program is developing. That means the issue is fundamental; it means, further, that there is no necessity for building the issue, and it means as well that it involves vital questions of policy.

As I said above, there are too many laws, too many don'ts and very few do's. Restriction and regulation always breed more restriction and regulation. The Roosevelt administration has been constantly saying "don't" in the shape of laws and the tremendous majority in congress has been giving President Roosevelt almost unlimited power to do as he wants to do beyond the "don't" legislation. So the Barton program would restore a great deal of freedom to the people themselves and would restore to congress much of the power that it has given to the President. To carry that thought further, then, the Barton program actually seems to me to propose saving only those laws that the progress of civilization shows to be sound and workable.

We might consider some of the statutes which Mr. Barton wants to repeal. There is for example the so-called Thomas amendment—one of the most assinine and dangerous pieces of legislation ever to get on the statute books. The legislation, forced through by Senator Thomas of Oklahoma in May of 1933, gave the President the power to issue $3,000,000,000 in paper currency. I do not see how anybody can regard it as anything but authority to issue printing press money. Of course, it never has been used by President Roosevelt and probably never will be, but the authority to go into printing press inflation exists and that is the danger. How, for instance, can you or I or anyone else feel sure that the money we have in our pocket or the few dollars in the bank is going to be worth anything tomorrow when the President of the United States, by one stroke of the pen, could turn loose a flood of worthless money.

Mr. Barton also seeks liquidation of a flock of government agencies. Some of them are 20 years old or of even greater age—built as wartime emergency units, but still in existence for no reason at all. Besides the War Finance corporation and some others of that wartime era, it is proposed to get rid of some things of more recent date. The Commodity Credit corporation and the two export-import banks, to mention only three. Now, there is no reason available for retention of the skeletons of the World war, and there appears to have been no reason for creation of such things as the export-import banks. I mean there was no sound reason. Those radicals who forced the diplomatic recognition of Soviet Russia thought there was reason for the export-import banks because they held such banks would enable trade with Russia. But Russian trade has amounted to about the same as the sale of mules in my home county of Missouri.

Two other pieces of legislation which Mr. Barton seeks to repeal are strictly New Deal. One is that law which gave the President the right to change the value of the dollar at will, within certain limitations. I suppose there are some who still believe that devaluation of the dollar has done or can do good in aiding recovery. It seems to me, however, that existence of that power in the hands of one man is just another basis for uncertainty among all of the people. In any event, the failure of that panacea has been amply demonstrated.

The piece of far-reaching New Deal legislation concerned is the so-called Guffey coal law. That thing is a price fixing measure. It gave authority to a coal commission to prescribe prices throughout the country, and producers would be violating a law if they sold below those figures; they would be subject to fines and prison terms. Only recently, the price fixing features were enjoined by a circuit court of appeals and so at the moment they are not operative. Yet the threat exists. And attention should be called to the fact also that the three judges who granted an injunction were appointed by President Roosevelt and supposed, therefore, to be very liberal in their views. Mr. Barton called the Guffey coal act a piece of "grand larceny against the consumers," because, he explained, the consumers are made to pay the higher prices fixed by the commission and they have no word to say about it.

Among other laws which Mr. Barton wants to repeal is the ill-starred silver purchase act. That law was another one which the inflationists in congress forced through in 1934 when all of the brain-trust camp followers were in their heyday. The only result that I can discover flowing from the silver purchase act is a grand outpouring of cash for the owners of silver mines. They obtained two or three times what their silver was really worth.

Analysis of the limited number of laws, I believe, shows the trend of the Barton program. It may be that he will never get to first base with any of them. My conviction, however, is quite to the contrary. I firmly expect to see a growth in the strength that such a program will muster.

About the time you are reading this column, there will be an incident taking place in Tientsin, China, that is a milestone in the history of the United States army. Late in February orders become operative for the departure of the Fifteenth United States infantry from Chinese soil. That, of itself, of course, does not provoke particular interest. But the famous Fifteenth has been on foreign duty for 26 years and that is the longest any unit of the United States army ever has been away from our shores.

It ought to be explained that very few of the soldiers making up the Fifteenth infantry were with the outfit when it first was assigned overseas. But the regiment has been stationed abroad and the recruits to its ranks have been dispatched continuously to it as retirements and expiration of enlistments have occurred. It is now coming back to American soil and will be stationed at Fort Lewis.

The Fifteenth has a most honorable record, beginning with its organization in 1861. It won honors at Shiloh and in the campaigns of 1862 in Alabama and Kentucky. It fought at Murfreesboro, at Chickamauga, Chattanooga, and at Atlanta. In 1880, it was at the front in the campaigns against Utes, and again in the China relief expedition of 1900, and these were followed by action in the Philippine insurrection. There was a brief spell when the regiment was on home soil, but then it went to work in Cuba. Subsequently, it was moved around here and there until the Manchurian dynasty was overthrown and China became a republic. It sailed to Tientsin in November, 1912, and there it has remained.

STAR DUST

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

JUDY GARLAND, Fanny Brice and Allan Jones, those persistent favorites of the "Good News" radio hour threaten to become top-ranking stars in motion pictures, too, as soon as Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer releases "Everybody Sing."

Unlike recent screen musicals that buried their stories under ponderous sets and armies of dancers, this one makes the story all-important and just introduces song numbers and gaudy sets incidentally.

It is a tale of a frenzied family. Papa is Reginald Owen, an excitable playwright; mama is Billie Burke, a stage star given to fits of weeping; Judy Garland the swinging daughter, Fanny Brice the maid, and Jones, the chef. With the aid of the maid and chef, Judy tries to bring some order into the chaotic household.

Waiters up at the Arrowhead Lake lodge where many Paramount companies go on location think that motion-picture acting and strange tastes in food go together. Fred MacMurray demanded maple syrup on his cottage cheese. John Barrymore puts pepper on his oatmeal. Gladys Swarthout eats whipped cream on boiled cabbage, a peasant dish she learned to eat as a vocal student in Hungary.

Because Carole Lombard does not like turkey and cannot eat it without an expression of disgust, a property man on the "Fools for Scandal" set had to fix up something that looked like a turkey leg, but wasn't, for a scene of hers. He just strapped a turkey leg, wrapped it with roast beef, and Carole was able to play the scene with required enthusiasm.

Hollywood players, equally weary of crowds, are joining a back-to-the-farm movement. For some time Barbara Stanwyck has lived on a ranch quite remote from Hollywood and recently the hinterlands have claimed Myrna Loy, Charles Winninger, Kay Francis, Clark Gable, Robert Taylor and Carole Lombard.

There is no unemployment problem these days among the Hollywood studio hairdressers. Extras appearing with Norma Shearer in "Marie Antoinette" require the daily services of one hundred and fifteen hairdressers, who draw a total wage of two thousand dollars.

Rumor has it that several of Ray Bolger's best scenes were cut out of "Rosalie," but he does not care any more because he is to be rewarded with stardom in "Snug Harbor." Audiences at the preview of the "Goldwyn Follies" were so enthusiastic over Phil Baker that Sam Goldwyn ordered his salary doubled on his next picture. Third of the trio on whom good luck smiled this week is Frances Dee. Paramount was so impressed by her work in "Wells Fargo" and her current "Marching Herds" that they have given her a glamorous role opposite George Raft in "Racing Form."

ODDS AND ENDS—Don Wilson, Jack Benny's announcer, plays himself in "Radio City Revels." ... Fred Astaire and James Cagney are inseparable pals these days. Ever since Cagney revived his old days as a hoofer in "Something to Sing About" he has been dance mad. ... Henny Youngman long on the Kate Smith hour made a tremendous hit in a Hollywood night club with the result that you will be seeing him in motion pictures soon. ... Dick Powell is dissatisfied with his radio program and threatens to walk out on it if he is not given more authority over what appears on the program. ... Barbara Stanwyck has made peace with R. K. O. and will appear in "The Saint in New York."

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

If You Are Making a Crazy Patch Quilt.

MAKING an old fashioned silk crazy patch quilt is a simply fascinating thing to do. From the moment you start collecting bits of silk and satin and velvet until the second you invent your last combination of embroidery stitches it holds your interest.

This type of quilt is not quilted after piecing, but tied like a comforter. No padding is needed if soft warm material is used for the foundation. The pieces are always in irregular shapes—often very tiny and the largest is seldom more than four or five inches long. They are pinned or basted to a foundation of soft muslin, flannel or an old wool blanket is good to use. One patch shown here is a piece of ribbon and the selvages are not turned or covered. It is best to arrange a number of patches before you start to sew them in place with the embroidery stitches.

The embroidery is really used to give balance and unity to the whole design. If a patch seems too light make it darker by embroidering it in dark thread. If it seems too plain you can trace the little forget-me-not design shown here onto it and embroider it in natural colors or use some of the more simple designs shown here as fillers.

Many more authentic old patchwork stitches are in a new leaflet which is now included with the book offered herewith. This book also tells you how the draperies in today's sketches are interlined.

Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book, SEWING. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slipcovers and dressing tables; curtains for every type of room; lampshades, rugs, ottomans and other useful articles for the home. Readers wishing a copy should send name and address, enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred) to Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplains St., Chicago, Ill.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

For Winter Meals.

SCALLOPED dishes are favorites for cold weather because it is a pleasure to use the oven and because the blended flavors of foods makes such delicious dishes. The tartness of tomatoes complements most meat that is being served, while there are almost unlimited ways of making the dish, you may enjoy trying the following recipe.

Scalloped Tomatoes.

1 No. 2½ can tomatoes
1 tsp. minced onion
1 tsp. salt

Combine the tomatoes with onion and arrange a layer of tomatoes in a baking dish. Mix the salt, sugar with the bread crumbs blend with melted butter. Pour a layer of crumbs over the tomatoes, add another layer of tomatoes, crumbs, and so on until the dish is filled and ingredients used. Leave crumbs on top. Bake about 30 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees).

If you happen to have sweet cucumber pickles on hand, slice two or three and add to the above ingredients.

Tars Training for Battle

TEA TESTER

Weekend pupils shown during a six-inch gun drill aboard H.M.S. Chatham as part of the training of Britain's newly trained personnel. Shortage of shore training establishments of the size of the rearmament, has made it necessary to use sea for training British tars instead of the customary land stations. The construction of new battleships, cruisers, destroyers and submarines, the personnel of the British navy has been considerably putting a strain on the facilities for training the new recruits.

Among the many tea testers assembled by Uncle Sam in New York recently was Robert Lewis. Mr. Lewis sampled many brands of tea which will determine the standards for 20,000,000,000 cups of the beverage to be consumed by Americans in 1938. One of them, at least, didn't make a hit with Mr. Lewis. It's the one he is shown holding—and disliking.

Three Frocks—a Wardrobe

IF YOU want to be all set for a full and gay Spring, have these three dresses in your wardrobe. Something for morning, something for street and a lovely frock for afternoon parties. All three are easy to make. And you can have the complete group for a fraction of what you would usually spend, if you make them at home.

Shirtwaist Style.

Trim and tailored, this is the favorite silhouette for Spring. The skirt with kick pleat back and front is fun to wear, very comfortable for walking and going about your daily work. Note the yoke top and inverted pleat in back of bodice to permit perfect freedom. It is a grand spectator sports dress and will make up beautifully in silk crepe, rayon print or cotton fabrics.

Princess for Morning.

You'll feel sweet as sixteen in this pretty square-necked princess dress with fitted lines. The silhouette is molded and slim. Note the pretty sleeves, puffed high, to make the waistline look even smaller. Choose a pretty cotton print or one of the new rayons to make a dress as charming as the one shown. You'll find the pattern complete with sew chart telling you exactly how to proceed.

Fitted Lines for Afternoon.

Look lovely and picturesque in this frock on molded lines with uplift at the waist and soft shirring in front of bodice. The roll collar and low V neckline is very slenderizing. You'll enjoy the good lines, the flattery of this dress and its grand wearability. Whether it is a luncheon for six or a dinner at eight, you'll be correctly dressed in this frock.

The Patterns.

1976 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 34 requires 4 1/4 yards of 35-inch fabric.

1452 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 16 requires 4 3/4 yards of 39-inch fabric.

1451 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39-inch fabric. For collar in contrast 3/4 yard.

TIPS to Gardeners

Know Your Soil

A GARDENER who knows the quality and texture of his soil can get maximum returns from his garden.

Clayey soils require careful handling, but are productive. Sandy soils are early. Sandy loams are just about ideal for most home garden crops.

Peas, lettuce, cabbage, broccoli, cauliflower, beets, carrots, radish and onion like moderately cool, moist conditions during development. Plant them early so they will develop before the extreme heat of summer arrives.

Plant them again later, timing the planting so they will mature during the cool, moist fall months.

Sweet corn, beans, tomato, pepper, egg plant, cucumber, melons, squash and pumpkin are not as hardy as those listed above and prefer plenty of heat, sunlight and ample moisture for best development.

They should be planted later than peas, lettuce and carrots, so as to come into maturity during the warmest weeks of summer.

District Winners Defeat Shamrocks In Semi-final

TO STRATFORD IN SEMI-FINAL ROUND

Over Rake In First Round Game

The first round of the District Tournament at Mason City Thursday night, Coach A. L. Jorgenson's Klemme High School boys trounced Rake 40 to 12, a loosely played contest. The Shamrocks saw the Rake boys pour in the first basket, and then to pour in a few on their own account. The half found the Shamrocks out in front 17 to 5, and Rake team never scored again in the final period, as they looped in three field goals and a free throw to bring total up to 12.

Jorgenson led the scoring for Shamrocks with 17 points, Grosshuesch and Trampel 7 and 8 respectively. The scoring was evenly divided.

Lose To Stratford

Friday night the Shamrocks lost their State Tournament aspirations to nothingness when they bowed to a strong Stratford team in the semi-final round of the District.

Stratford team jumped in the early lead and held a 9 to 4 edge at the end of the first quarter, however the Shamrocks came back strong and cut the lead to four points, the half time score being 18 to 14. The third quarter Shamrocks five widened the gap and the Shamrocks were up 26 to 20. The final period was a close action on both teams, with one point of their opponent. However, the Stratford team set on going to the State Tournament and widened the gap two more points in the last quarter, the final count being 40 to 26.

Ed Spurling seemed to be the key to much for Klemme, although Schuldts turned in a job of guarding on the big forward, his height advantage was great and he dumped in eleven goals and a pair of free throws to lead the scoring for the Shamrocks. Earl Nelson, fast break forward, hit the hoop several times from the field and once from the free throw line for 11 points.

Grosshuesch and Schuldts looked best for Klemme as they rang in 12 and 10 points respectively. Grosshuesch got his on six field goals and Schuldts got his on three field goals and four gift shots. Jorgenson failed to score for the first time this season and also went out for the first time this season.

H. S. BASKETBALL—WOI

All of the daylight games of the state high school basketball tournament which will be held in Des Moines, March 10, 11, and 12, will be broadcast over WOI, Iowa State College radio station with "Andy" at the microphone.

This will be the eighth consecutive year that WOI has broadcast the basketball tournament. The program is put on in response to requests from high schools and others interested in the tournament.

The first game will be on the air at 9:50, Thursday morning, March 10. There will be two games Thursday morning, Thursday afternoon at 2:30 the third will be broadcast.

Friday, March 11, there will be two games in the afternoon, the first starting at 2:25. Saturday the thirteenth and fourteenth games of the tournament will be broadcast, beginning at 1:25. These will be the semi-finals. The finals and consolation games will be played in the evening.

Various speakers are being engaged for short talks in between the games. O. C. Varner, chairman of the board of control of the Iowa State High School Athletic Association, will speak at 10:20 Thursday morning, March 10. Another of the speakers will be Dr. D. W. Morehouse, president of Drake University, representing the Iowa College Presidents' Association. He will speak at 3 Friday afternoon. Others are being arranged.

On Tour With Waldorf College Choir

Miss LaVonne Sherwood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Sherwood, a student at Waldorf College, is leaving with the Waldorf acapella choir on a concert tour through Iowa, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Illinois. The choir will appear approximately 25 times from March 5 to March 20, a period of two weeks. The highlights of the tour will be two concerts in Chicago, Illinois, and one concert at the Hoyt Sherman Place in Des Moines, Iowa. This is the tenth annual Waldorf Choir tour under the direction of Professor Odvin Hagren.

Mrs. Thada Entertains

Mrs. W. L. Thada entertained at two tables of bridge Friday afternoon. Mrs. W. F. Missman won high prize, and Mrs. Ed Buntenhach the travel prize. A delicious lunch was served by the hostess.

FOUR SHAMROCKS HANG UP BASKETBALL SHOES

Last Friday night four of the Shamrocks played their last game of basketball for Klemme High School. They are Capt. Paul Schuldts and Verner Lau, guards on this year's team; Ray Jorgenson Jr., center, and Elmer Trampel, forward. Ruben Grosshuesch is the other member of the team, while "Genie" Kluckhohn is the alternate. Both of these boys will be back with the team next year.

The team this year has enjoyed a very successful season, having won 21 games out of 25 starts, and piling up an average of 37.76 points per game, while their opponents were getting an average of 22.48 points per game. Their percentage on games for the entire season is .840 and considering the fact that they have taken on both class A and class B teams, that's not so bad.

SERVICES ARE HELD FOR MRS. H. REED AT GARNER

GARNER—Funeral services for Mrs. Herbert V. Reed, 77, were held Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the United Presbyterian church with the Rev. W. A. Thompson in charge.

Ira Overholt, manager, announces that free hot coffee and sandwiches will be served throughout the day. A free gift will also be given to each farmer who registers during the day.

FARM BUREAU LADIES MET AT W. L. THADA HOME

On March 1st twenty home project leaders and chairmen of Liberty and Ell townships met at the home of Mrs. W. L. Thada for the third lesson which was on dinnerware, silver and glass. Dinnerware can be classified in a variety of ways, but generally speaking there are four main types: Earthenware, Semi-Vitreous, china, and porcelain. The method of manufacturing dishes was carefully studied and Miss Zollinger showed specimens of material used in manufacturing dinnerware, and also plates at their various stages before they become a finished product; the difference between hand-painted and stencilled china was explained.

Decorations applied under the glaze are most durable. Decorations over the glaze may fade because of improper firing or caustic soaps, scouring powders and acids in food may cause colors to fade.

Silverware and glass was studied as to kind, method of manufacturing, care and selection.

In the music project "Turkey in the Straw" was sung by the group and "Steal Away to Jesus," and "Venetian Love Song" were played by Miss Zollinger.

At noon a covered dish luncheon was served after which Virginia Reel was played.

The next meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Ben Reimer, April 1.

W.F.M.S. Met Thursday

"Founder's Day" of the W.F.M.S. of the M. E. Church was observed last week Thursday afternoon at the home of Mrs. C. C. Kilgore. A beautiful cake was lighted with candles representing the 69th anniversary. Also seven large orange candles were lighted representing the seven goals of the Society.

A most delicious lunch was served by Mrs. C. C. Kilgore.

NEW LICENSES ON SALE SOON

Waters of Colorado Soon to Irrigate the Platte Valley

By RONALD L. IVES

Denver, Colo.—Waters now roaring down the unvisited canyons of the upper Colorado river soon will ripple placidly through the irrigation ditches of the Platte valley, 40 miles to the east of the river gorges and across the 14,000-foot-high Colorado front range. Work has begun on the long-debated Colorado-Big Thompson Transmountain Diversion project.

Armed with good maps and $40,000,000, hard rock men of the United States bureau of reclamation have started their drills roaring in the first bores for the 13 1/4 mile tunnel through the backbone of the continent. Grand lake, carved long ago from the living granite by Ice-age glaciers, will become an irrigation reservoir, storing water that will later gurgle through the great tunnel, to issue near the little town of Estes Park and fall into a power penstock.

After generating power, the water will flow to storage reservoirs at the edge of the great plains, and later go to the thirsty beet fields of the Platte valley.

Relief for the "Sugar Bowl." Designed to remove forever the spectre of water shortage from the farms of northeastern Colorado, and to generate cheap power for farm machines and mining equipment, this diversion project will bring no new land under cultivation. Only lands now under irrigation will receive the water from the Colorado river.

Fast becoming a dustbowl, with surface water entirely used for irrigation and underground water supplies mined out during the last drought, the water needs of the Platte valley, Colorado's "Sugar Bowl," have increased yearly. Ditches already have been run miles back into the hills to catch each little stream at its source. Now, all the streams on the eastern slope are harnessed, and there is no possibility of getting more water from them.

Through the Front Range. Colorado river water, until now largely wasted in violent spring floods caused by sudden melting of the mountain snow, and flowing through lands unsuited to cultivation, seemed the only solution to the Platte valley's problem. The Front Range, rising more than a mile above the river valley, presented only one of several obstacles. Now, with tunnel construction planned, and storage reservoir construction starting, the transmountain water diversion will soon be an accomplished fact.

From the reservoirs, ditches will extend, like the arms of an octopus, to gather in the water of each little stream in the region. A lower reservoir, built in the melting basin of the long-extinct Monarch Valley glacier, with a dam in the deep-cut granite canyon of the Colorado river, will collect the water as it runs in. Above, at the tunnel mouth, Grand lake will be enlarged, and fitted with special spillways to keep its level constant. Power generated at the eastern end of the tunnel will be wired across the storm-swept range and used to pump water from the lower reservoir to the upper.

Keep New-Born Baby Warm and Reduce the Mortality

Washington. — Keeping new-born babies warm after their birth is a simple but important way of helping to cut down infant deaths, Dr. Horton Casparis of Vanderbilt university pointed out at the conference on better care for mothers and babies held under the auspices of the United States children's bureau here.

Before birth the baby has been living in an environment with a temperature of 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit, which may be compared to the wilting heat of midsummer. An infant, especially a prematurely born infant, needs to be gradually acclimated to the temperature of his new environment, just as an adult is careful about not getting chilled after a hot bath. Failure to protect the baby against the change in temperature at birth may, directly or indirectly, be responsible for his death.

Protecting the infant from infection and seeing that he gets plenty of water and suitable food are other important measures stressed by Dr. Casparis.

Lifeless Zones in Sea

Tulsa, Okla. — Mysterious, evil-smelling, lifeless zones in the seas off the coast of Arabia, markedly resembling the azoic conditions deep in the Black sea, are the latest puzzle to geologists seeking the origin of oil.

American Spas Not Well Enough Known to Our Physicians

Chicago. — Let us save for America and Americans the many millions spent each year in foreign spas.

Dr. Bernard Fantus, Chicago physician, makes a plea to state governments to provide the nation's doctors with information in regard to the natural remedial resources within their own states.

He further asks the American Medical association to interest itself in ridding American spas of quackery.

Dr. Fantus presents his two pleas in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

American doctors know a great deal more about European spas than about our own health resorts, Dr. Fantus states, "although in this country there are practically all the climatic and balneic remedies possessed by any other country in the world."

Some 2,000 places in the United States boast of springs of more or less medicinal value.

The result of the European exodus each year is not only a net loss to this country but also a financial loss to the patients who are sent abroad for a treatment they could obtain much more economically nearer home.

Better Handled in Europe. In Europe, Dr. Fantus declares, the governments and the governmentally owned medical schools see to it that their doctors are well informed as to their national health resorts.

This is not only altruistic but also sound financial policy for, through taxation, governments are in virtual partnership with all the national enterprises.

A sick person does not get the same benefit out of drinking mineral waters from a bottle in his own home, experience has shown.

The therapeutic value of a mineral water "cure" consists also of the remedial value of a vacation, the change of scene and of occupation, the change in mode of living, the subtle influence of climate and the factor of faith, the Chicago physician states.

Distrust and skepticism prevail among doctors regarding American health resorts. With a few notable exceptions this distrust is well merited in the opinion of Dr. Fantus.

"The mendacity of many of the advertisements for mineral springs rivals that of the claims for 'patent medicines' in their palmiest days," he writes. "Unethical practice and quackery abound in and around health resorts. Even the social features and amusements, in many of them, may be objectionable from a therapeutic as well as a moral standpoint."

California Coast Ranges Comparatively Modern

Washington. — California's earthquake-plagued coast ranges first started to grow only a short time before the Ice age began, and received their most recent uplift only a few thousand years ago, according to data reported recently by Dr. W. P. Woodring of the United States geological survey.

Rising first during the Pliocene period, age of giant mammals, just before the beginning of the ice ages, to part of their present height, the coast ranges were thrown into a jumble of ridges and basins somewhat resembling their present construction.

Ice age erosion, during the time of alternating glacial periods and warm spells, changed the shape of the original mountains somewhat, removing material from the higher lands and depositing it in the valleys, it was stated.

Evidence has been presented during the past generation to prove that the coast ranges were built any time from about 40,000,000 years ago to 20,000 years ago, but the most recent studies lead to the conclusion that the greatest uplifting and deformation took place during the Pleistocene period, time of ice ages, which probably began not more than 1,000,000 years ago.

Polar Seas Fast Warming. Russian Scientists Find

Moscow.—Surface layers of cold water in the Arctic ocean are becoming rapidly thinner, reports Tass, Soviet news agency, summarizing the results of recent thorough studies of Russia's 16,000-mile northern coastline and adjacent seas.

From the surface to a depth of 210 yards, in 1895, Fridtjof Nansen found the temperature in the Arctic ocean slightly more than one degree below freezing. Now, in the same areas, the cold zone is only half as deep. Below the cold zone the water was warmer. Soviet scientists believe that this shallowing of the cold zone is caused by an increased amount of warm Atlantic water flowing into the Arctic ocean under the surface.

"Papoose Plane" for Air Mail Service

Photographed from an accompanying airplane is the Mayo composite plane during a trial flight near Rochester, England. This radical departure in aerodynamics comprises two planes, the Mala, or mother plane, and the Mercury, the smaller ship which rides the mother's back like an Indian papoose. In service the Mercury will be loaded with mail and carried far out over the Atlantic by the Mala, whence it will be released to continue its flight to the United States.

PIMIENTO BISQUE

THE soup described here is delicious. It has a delicate flavor and the rich color of pimientos gives just the red touch to the finished product.

1 can cream of celery soup 1 tsp. salt

1 cup milk 2 slices of bread

3 pimientos 1/2 tsp. paprika

If canned condensed soup is used, prepare according to directions on the label and then add the cup of milk. If fresh cream of celery soup is used, pour the contents into a bowl and add the cup of milk. Rub pimientos through a sieve and add to the soup. Add salt, and paprika and heat until soup is hot. Stir frequently to prevent scorching. Remove from heat before serving. Serves 6.

The food with red color for main course might be a ring made with canned beets.

The red color for the dessert might be supplied by a raspberry gelatin made with a can of raspberries.

This is about six times the value of all the gold and silver mined in this country during the same period. The produced coal was enough to pay the government's current debt in full still be $5,000,000,000 to the

2 WAY RELIEF FOR THE MISERY COLD

Take 2 BAYER ASPIRIN tablets and drink a full glass of water. Repeat treatment in 2 hours.

If throat is sore from the cold, crush and stir 3 BAYER ASPIRIN tablets in 1/2 glass of water. Gargle twice. This eases throat rawness and soreness almost instantly.

All it usually costs to relieve misery of a cold today — is 35¢ — relief for the period of a cold 15¢ to 25¢. Hence no far need neglect even minor colds.

Here is what to do: Take BAYER tablets when you feel cold coming on — with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in package. Relief comes rapidly.

The Bayer method of relief from colds is the way many doctors approve. You take Bayer Aspirin for relief — then if you are improved promptly, you call family doctor.

Lesson for March 13

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:30-44.
GOLDEN TEXT—Give ye them to eat.
Mark 6:37.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Fed a Hungry Crowd.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Boy's Part in a Great Miracle.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Sharing What We Have.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Providing for the Needs of All.

"My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus" (Phil. 4:19). Such is the assurance of God's Word. Countless Christians have proved it to be true that they may trust God to supply every need—temporal or spiritual.

The lesson for today first presents the disciples as they had come back from their preaching expedition and presented to the Lord Jesus a report of their stewardship in ministering the bread of life to the spiritually needy. He invites them to a place apart from the busy walks of daily life for a time of communion and rest. The multitude would not be denied, however, and follow our Lord to the desert place. Having taught them, Jesus has opportunity to instruct His disciples in the important ministry of supplying for those in need the bread for their bodies.

I. The Ministry of the Bread of Life.

Reports of accomplishments in the field of Christian work (although sometimes an earnest accounting of stewardship of service and money) are all too often prepared for the purpose of impressing men and seeking their financial assistance. The real report is the one which disciples make to their Lord. It concerns two vital points.

1. "What they had done" (v. 30).

One of the temptations which face the preacher and teacher of Christian truth is to avoid unpleasant and difficult problems by simply proclaiming the truth and doing nothing about the outworking of that truth in daily living. It sounds very pious to say that we will present the Word and let it do its own work, but the Christian worker who evades his duty to deal at close grips with sin and disorder in the church and community has not discharged his responsibility to Christ.

2. "What they had taught" (v. 30).

The second temptation of the preacher is to follow the specious reasoning of the modernist who says that it does not matter what a man believes, it is what he does that counts. The foundation of Christian character is Christian doctrine, therefore the disciple of Christ must know what to teach, and give account to the Lord for his teaching. Teaching and doing the commandments of God go hand in hand.

II. The Ministry of Daily Bread.

Jesus found no rest, for the multitudes followed Him to the other side of the lake. Ere long the evening approaches, and the disciples begin to be concerned about how this great multitude is to be fed. They follow the inclinations of the flesh and decide to solve the problem by asking Jesus to

1. "Send them away" (v. 36).

The church has followed their example in dealing with the social problems of the people down through the years. The result is that being denied fellowship, comfort, and help by a church which was too busy building up a vast organization or a beautiful order of worship, the common people have responded to the appeal of political leaders who have provided a substitute for what the church should have given them.

Serious thoughts are these. It will not do for us to "send them away" from the church empty hearted and empty handed. Our Lord says—

2. "Give ye them to eat" (v. 37).

Reckoning hastily on what a small boy had brought for his lunch (trust an alert boy to be ready!), the disciples soon demonstrate that it is impossible to feed this great throng. Logic is such a devastating thing when it operates apart from faith in God. They were absolutely right in their reasoning and in their calculations, but they had forgotten the one factor that really counted. Jesus was there, and Jesus is God, and God is omnipotent.

3. "He commanded . . . and they did all eat" (vv. 39, 42).

When God speaks all the limitations of the finite disappear, and the needs of men are fully met—with "twelve baskets full of fragments" left over!

Let those who labor in difficult places with limited resources take heart—and trust God.

Wisdom

Wisdom allows nothing to be good that will not be so forever; no man to be happy but he that needs no other happiness than what he has within himself; no man to be great or powerful that is not master of himself.—Seneca.

Longings

Every longing should become an active impulse in the soul. Our longing should lead us into all paths of Christly service and all heroic duty.

For Your Spring Wardrobe

DRESSES that not only satisfy your present craving for something new and spring-like, but also look ahead to a later season, too. Make them yourself at home, for very much less than you usually spend on clothes. You'll find it very easy to do, with the sew chart that accompanies each pattern.

Corsetette Waistline.

If you have a slim figure, this is the afternoon dress for you! The fullness over the bust, the sleeves cut in one with the shoulders, and the lifted waistline, are just as flattering as they can be! It's the kind of dress you can wear to bridges, luncheons, meetings, and for every afternoon occasion, with the assurance that it is not only smart but becoming.

Slenderizing House Frock.

Especially designed for full figures, this house frock follows straight, tailored lines, and fits beautifully. You can get into it in nothing flat, and it doesn't take long to make either, thanks to the complete and detailed sew chart that comes with your pattern. Make it up in a pretty, small-fingered printed percale, and trim it with rows of old-fashioned rick-rack.

A Frilly Home Cotton.

This is perfectly charming, made up in dotted Swiss, voile or dimity, in some flower-like color like delicate blue or pink or sunny, clear yellow, with sheer white collar and cuffs. It's ideal for slim figures. Nice to wear around the house now, perfect to wear anywhere, later on, during summer afternoons.

The Patterns.

1442 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20, 40 and 42. Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material.

1389 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4 1/2 yards of 35 or 39-inch material 3 3/4 yards of braid.

1453 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, plus 5/8 yard contrasting, 2 1/4 yards edging.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Drive, Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

In Business Training we have completed another unit of our course in business. There are four sections mainly, which are divided up into smaller divisions. These sections are communication, merchandising, transportation, and finance. The class has just completed the transportation of people, transportation by mail, and transportation by express and freight. In connection with this Miss Brakel brought to class a package which Mr. Elstad received by freight. It had all of the labels we had studied. Everyone enjoyed looking at it.

The English I class been reading the book "Julius Caesar" which is a play written by William Shakespeare. It is very different from anything we have read this year.

The General Science class enjoyed a laugh when Freddie Bell dropped a sack of corn. Mr. Elstad had asked Walter to bring some corn to class so we could study it. Freddie was holding the sack and it spilled on the floor. Mr. Elstad thought Freddie was going to play marbles and gave him a lecture. When the class started to laugh, he realized it was the corn Walter had brought to class as a favor. He apologized to Freddie but told him to put it on the desk next time.

Public Speaking class was organized into three committees to manage the sub-district one-act play contest being held here this Wednesday evening. One committee, headed by Harold Wicks, had charge of bringing the necessary furniture to the schoolhouse. Another committee, with La Rayne Stille as chairman, had charge of moving and arranging the stage scenes between plays. Another committee, lead by Elaine Buntentbach and Novella Beier, had charge of arranging properties on the stage.

The American Literature class is trying its luck at writing short stories.

Each person in Public Speaking class gives a short pantamime, the others in the class are to guess the imitation.

The news staff has been aided this week by several assistants, as many of the staff members either participated in the district tournament at Mason City or attended as fans.

GRADES 1 AND 2

On Friday the third and fourth graders came to our room. We said poems and sang some of our new songs for them. They read poems and sang for us, too.

GRADES 3 AND 4

The third grade took self-testing drill number five this week. They raised their score from average to good.

Both grades wrote letters to Miss Azeltine this week.

Friday we went into the first and second grade room for a reading party. Each grade gave some of their favorite poems and sang some songs.

Phyllis Christiance, Dean Jacobs, Elizabeth Goll, Peggy Coobs, Mary Meyer and Ruth Bell received 100 per cent in spelling last Friday.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Ewald Grosshuesch and Lawrence Bock—reporters

Junior, Edward, Patricia, Lawrence, Ewald and Julia had perfect scores in the spelling review test.

Miss Irvine had a birthday Thursday. We gave her a card in the morning and a present in the afternoon. The present was a box of stationery. Miss Merritt came into our room to see the present. She said she had a birthday.

We have finished another health contest. Herbert Mueller's side won.

We listened to another radio program Thursday. It was about Admiral Byrd and we heard him talk. We have read stories and studied about his explorations.

GRADES 7 AND 8

Garland Brinkman was chosen as editor of our paper. Melvin Coobs is assistant editor; Charles Bock, feature editor; and Lorraine Buntentbach, reporter.

The seventh grade students are making large United States maps.

Thursday afternoon we listened to a very interesting radio program entitled "Exits and Entrances" which was sponsored by the American School of the Air. It told about several expeditions to the North and South Pole. Admiral Richard E. Byrd was a guest on the program and he gave a short talk.

The deposits of unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand, and the deposit of the successful bidder will be returned to him upon his executing the contract and filing with the county auditor the bond as herein required.

In making the award the facilities, reputation and responsibility of the bidder will be given due weight.

By virtue of statutory authority a preference will be given to materials, products, supplies, provisions and all other articles produced, manufactured, made or grown within the state of Iowa.

Published by order of the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa.

Dated at Garner, Iowa, this 8th day of March, 1938.

FRED C. MISSAL,
County Auditor.

TEACHING NATURE STUDY

Today there is much "nature study" being taught in our public schools. Unfortunately, while nature study has played a part in developing an appreciation of Nature's "works," it has failed in many instances to instill in our growing youth the necessary principles of protecting Nature. The condition can be remedied by the education of boys and girls in the importance of such conservation. The nature study courses given in the preceding years will furnish an adequate foundation, especially if the teachers emphasize the principles of protection whenever there is an opportunity.

TRAILER REGULATIONS
ARE ISSUED FOR 1938

Attention of anyone who wants to pull a trailer is called to the law which requires all such vehicles to have a hitch which will prevent them from swaying from side to side when on the road.

Trailers must also be equipped with a safety chain whether they are a two or four wheel rig. They must be equipped with a tail light which will throw the white light on the number plate and must have such a lamp on them at all times they are on the road whether this be day or night.

If the trailer weighs less than a thousand pounds a load of up to one thousand pounds may be hauled on it on a license plate which is furnished free of charge. If either weight goes over this amount a different license must be secured.

All trailers must have a license on kind or another when on the road.

SHALL WE SAY "SUCCESSFUL?"

Early records show that Iowa's waters were stocked with many fish not native to the State. These included Californian salmon, Atlantic salmon, landlocked salmon, lake trout, white fish, rainbow and Loch Leven trout. About 1880 carp was introduced in the State. By 1902 a law was passed by the Legislature authorizing the control of rough fish. Since that time carp have increased and are now found in nearly all waters of the State.

The carp, because of its life habits, destroys aquatic vegetation which is a part of the environment needed by much of the aquatic life on which game fish feed and which provides spawning places for "pan" fish. The spawning habits of carp destroy large numbers of nests and eggs of the game fish. The carp is a very prolific spawner. A five or six pound carp may scatter a half million eggs in a single season. On the other hand, a black bass only deposits from two to five thousand eggs.

It can hardly be said that the introduction of carp into Iowa was "successful."

TOO HEAVY PRUNING OF FRUIT TREES IS BAD AS TOO LIGHT

Many an Iowa orchard is in need of pruning because of the accumulation of dead wood caused by winter injury during the severe winter in 1935-36, observes H. E. Nichols of Iowa State College.

Trees should not be over-pruned, however, and there is as much danger of over pruning as there is of under pruning. Taking off too much of the fruiting wood will reduce the harvest even as will an accumulation of unproductive wood.

The pruning of trees which are bearing should be confined to the removal of small, diseased and weakly growing branches located in the interior of the tree, Mr. Nichols believes.

A young non-bearing tree should not be pruned in an attempt to force it into fruiting. A direct opposite will result for pruning stimulates the wood growth and possible fruiting will be sacrificed for large vegetative growth.

Excessive growth of young trees may be controlled by sewing a cover crop which will furnish a sod around the trees. Under-stimulated trees may be "revived" by applications of nitrate fertilizer or barnyard manure or by plowing up or discing the sod around the trees.

POULTRY INCOME IS UP DESPITE LOW EGG PRICE

In spite of lower egg prices, Iowa poultrymen who keep calendar flock records are making more than twice as much money above feed costs as they made a year ago.

At least that's the interpretation which may be made of the January calendar flock record report summarized by W. M. Vernon and R. W. Whitfield, extension poultrymen at Iowa State College.

And the reason for this "silver lining" is that feed prices have dropped even more than egg prices, and hens are laying better than they were a year ago.

Last month the average of 37 flock owners reporting showed a margin of 7 cents a bird in receipts over feed costs compared to 1 cent in January, 1937. The high 10 flocks reported a margin of 12 cents compared to 10 cents a year ago; and the low 10 reported a margin of 1 cent per bird compared with a loss of eight cents per bird a year ago.

Last month the average price of first quality eggs was 20 cents compared to 22 cents in January 1937, and ungraded eggs were 18 cents compared to 21. Feed costs, however, were only 11 cents a bird, compared to 17 cents in the first month of 1937.

Ants are supposed to be the busiest insects, yet they have time to attend every picnic.

Safety Workers Recruit Science In Battle on Highway Fatalities

Automatic Gadgets Will Eliminate Human Element in Autos of the Future, Say Pioneering Engineers—Read and Gasp at Their Elaborate Precautionary Plans!

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

Automobile accidents dealt sudden death to 39,700 persons and cost the nation two billion dollars last year.

That is not news. It is an all-time record and a disgrace which should be emblazoned in letters of fire along every highway of the land, although it already has screamed from many headlines in the last few weeks.

But today, for the first time, there is a definite, organized war being carried into every corner of the United States by an army of 8,000,000 who, with their families, make up a quarter of the nation's population, in an effort to drive the grim reaper from the highway once and for all.

THAT IS NEWS.

And scientists today are able to predict confidently that the time is in sight when science will take over the control of a moving car when it is not safe to leave the control in the driver's hands—and restore that control to the driver at times when nature would ordinarily take it away from him.

THAT IS NEWS, TOO.

Twelve far-seeing national, civic, educational and business organizations are recruiting the troops for the war on death.

One would expect to find lined up in such a campaign the American Automobile association, the Automotive Safety Foundation, the Highway Education board, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Automobile Dealers' association and the National Safety council—and so they are.

But it is encouraging to learn that the banner is also being carried by such ordinarily independent groups as the American Legion, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Congress of Parent-Teachers and the National Grange. Particularly the National Grange, for in the rural areas more automobile accidents result in swift and horrible death, relatively, than in the more crowded thoroughfares of the cities.

Science Takes a Hand.

And it is especially heartening to discover that two active groups represent the scientific resources of two great universities. These are the Traffic Safety institute of Northwestern university in Evanston, Ill., and the bureau of street traffic research of Harvard university at Cambridge, Mass.

Two "crystal-gazers" of science—Dr. Miller McClintock, director of the Harvard bureau, and Prof. John M. Lessells, of Massachusetts Institute of Technology—recently startled the automotive world with visions of the day science will make highway accidents next to impossible.

Dr. McClintock speaks of the day to come when invisible "electric bumper" rays will prevent one motorist from colliding with another, no matter how careless he may be.

"It is possible to lay in the pavement itself electrical cables which, when a car comes to a dangerous curve or around an obstruction, would automatically take the steering from the driver by radio control and thus center the car over the cable and steer it safely around the curve or obstruction," Dr. McClintock explains.

Pointing to the success of "invisible eye" controls in other fields, the scientist predicts the use of electric bumpers. This would be made possible by installing infrared lights in the rear of automobiles, which would actuate photo-electric cells in front of other cars. This "invisible eye" would reduce the speed of a car overtaking another too rapidly.

Lighting the Way.

Cars of the future may themselves turn on and off the lights used to illuminate highways at night, it is predicted by Dr. Mc-Clintock. This development will also make use of infra-red light rays and photo-electric cells, he says.

When the first "one-lunger" chugged down Main street, a speed of 30 miles an hour was considered remarkable, and as a result, no particular demand was put on the brakes. Nowadays, stock cars are manufactured with much greater speeds, and more efficient brakes have followed—brakes which can bring cars to a stop in less than half the distance formerly required, if the proper traction can be obtained on the road surface.

Such traction is a simple matter when road surfaces are dry, according to Professor Lessells, editor of the technical journal of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Eliminating the "hazard zone"—where wet pavement causes skidding accidents—will be one of science's greatest contributions to traf-on the road—10,000,000 more cars than now choke the highways!

Here are traffic developments predicted for the future: (1) Guiding cars automatically by invisible rays from cables in a street. (2) Ending motoring's "hazard zone" with—in effect—a battery of windshield wipers through non-skid methods. (3) Infra-red rays from car to car to slow down vehicles approaching too rapidly. (4) Radio beam warnings from one car to another. (5) Electric eyes to control highway lighting so that any given area is illuminated only when traffic requires it.

Except for the relatively few heavy traffic routes which are properly lighted, the inadequate systems used for illuminating the highways, and the blinding glare of headlights on the road, are two chief reasons given for rural roads being the scene of most fatal auto accidents.

Science is developing a new system of highway lights for certain areas which will supply long-range visibility without glare—illuminating the road so that a driver can see as far ahead as in clear daylight.

Glareless Headlights.

Because the taxpayers would groan if all highways were floodlighted by this new lighting system, traffic experts say that glareless headlights will be necessary on 90 per cent of the highways. Here, too, science has the answer in development of polarized glass for headlights and windshields to eliminate glare without reducing the amount of light on the road ahead.

Looking to the car of the future itself, the public is assured by the auto makers that the cars of the next few years will make the present models look more antiquated than the first horseless carriages.

A crystal-gazing picture of what

Dr. Miller McClintock, director of Harvard university bureau of street traffic research, examines a model "city of the future," where traffic will move quickly along super-highways.

fic safety, according to Professor Lessells.

Pointing out that the solution of the problem must be found at the point where the car makes contact with the road, Professor Lessells adds: "If we can instantaneously create a dry surface, over which the tire is always passing, the car's brakes will keep it under control. I anticipate that some way will soon be found to make this possible."

Autos on Increase.

The car owner who thinks that traffic safety will come only when fewer autos are on the highways is in for a big disappointment, if a recent survey of automobile and traffic experts means anything. They expect, on the basis of present trends, that the next 20 years will find 37,000,000 motor vehicles kind of a car today's driver may be riding in tomorrow, is given by Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, World War ace, and engineering "prophet."

Captain Rickenbacker predicts: "It will be an attractive car to ride in. In size and appearance the interior will be like a small living room. It will be air-conditioned and there will be no noise or vibration."

"You will have to look twice to find the engine. It will be less conspicuous than in cars today. It may be x-shaped or it may be radical like certain airplane engines. It may be in front or it may be behind. In any case, it will be lighter and more compact but just as powerful as the engines you are used to."

Horrors of the Drouth

DURING the great drouth of 1936 an enterprising photographer sold to news picture companies three "news from the drouth area of North Dakota" which were printed in newspapers all over the country. One showed the water in the Missouri river near Stanton so low that automobiles could ford the "Big Muddy" without difficulty. Another depicted "a herd of cattle from the drouth area contentedly grazing on the state capitol grounds at Bismarck"; and a third, the whitered skull of a steer lying on a bare spot of pasture that had been parched and cracked by the heat.

Widespread publication of these pictures caused great indignation throughout North Dakota because its citizens knew that they were gross exaggerations. One of the leading papers of the state, the Fargo Forum, exposed the hoax by reprinting the pictures labeled "It's a Fake."

Along with the Missouri river picture was printed one showing a Stanton ferry crossing the stream which, it declared, was 15 feet deep at that place. The second was labeled "a photographic trick—superimposing a picture of a herd of cattle on a picture of the North Dakota capitol building. Where those cows are presumably grazing is a graveled parking lot at the rear of the state capitol, thickly dotted with cars at all hours of the day." As for the steer's skull it was called a "movable 'prop' which comes in handy for photographers who want to touch up their pictures with a bit of the grisly" and it was pointed out that it was "a typical alkali flat, left when melting snow water and spring rains have passed. Without difficulty, one can find these in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Indiana, wherever one chooses."

The Floating Cabaret

BACK in 1924 the New York Herald Tribune printed a story which sent the United States coast guard on a wild goose chase all up and down the Atlantic seaboard. It was in the days of prohibition and this story described a 17,000-ton "floating cabaret" with an old-fashioned American bar, a ballroom, a jazz band and beautiful chorus girls—all provided for the entertainment of wealthy New Yorkers who visited this "joy spot" every night.

The story had been turned in by a young reporter named Sanford Jarrell who claimed that he had been an eye-witness of the merry-making going on there. Then Jarrell was sent out to get more details of the illicit bar. But instead of coming back with one, he sent back a signed confession that it was all a hoax. He had concocted the yarn to win the attention of his city editor. So copies of his confession, with the Herald-Tribune's apologies for being the unwitting perpetrator of the hoax, were sent to all the other New York papers which had been playing up the story, based upon Jarrell's "revelations."

However, a movie company which was just about to release a new picture called "Wine" capitalized on the excitement over this story. It placed an advertisement in all the papers in the form of a letter signed by "the captain of the 12-mile limit cafe" and advised readers to go to the manager of your favorite picture theater and whisper "show me Wine." He will do the rest. A great many did—and he did, thereby increasing box office receipts materially.

The Iron Maiden

FOR many years Nuremberg, Germany, was famous all over the world for a relic that was considered the most terrible instrument of torture ever devised by man. It was called the "Iron Maiden," a huge iron box, in the form of a cloaked and hooded woman, with hinged sides. Inside was an ingenious arrangement of razor-sharp projections so placed that, when a complicated clockwork slowly closed the doors upon the unfortunate prisoner, his eyes, heart and other vital organs were pierced.

According to tradition, more than one witch died a horrible death within the embrace of the "Iron Maiden" and the sight of it caused many a shudder when this and other sinister examples of medieval cruelty from the notorious tower of Nuremberg were taken on a tour and exhibited in the leading cities of the world. In 1931, however, the "Iron Maiden" was exposed as a hoax by Fraulein Hildegard Karter, who announced that this instrument of torture did not date from medieval times, nor had anyone ever been killed in it. Instead, the "Iron Maiden" was the invention of her great-uncle, an antiquarian who had constructed it back in 1867 to satisfy an apparent public taste for "horror relics" and who had made up an appropriate story to go with it.

By VIRGINIA VALE

UNCLE SAM is the producer of "The River," regarded by many as the greatest of current motion pictures, and one of the greatest motion pictures of all time. Specifically, "The River" was produced for the Farm Security administration by Pare Lorentz, a former New York film reviewer, who for the past two years has been turning down big-money offers from Hollywood in favor of working for the government.

"This is the story of the Mississippi, where it comes from, where it goes, what it has meant to us, and what it has cost us," the beautiful voice of Thomas Chalmers intones as the picture starts. From then on in magnificently photographed scenes we are shown an epic. The Mississippi rising in rebellion is far more stirring and majestic than all the actors you have ever seen in imaginary crises.

Months ago David Selznick and Paulette Goddard, who sometimes answers to the name of Mrs. Charles Chaplin, indulged in a bitter argument. Friends reported that Paulette expected to play the role of Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind," Mr. Selznick replied crisply that she was not even being considered for it, and Paulette was so upset she said she wouldn't play it even if he begged her to. Now they have patched up their troubles, she has signed a contract and both admit that if her tests are satisfactory she'll play the role.

Kate Smith had a guest star on her program who cost her almost as much as the sponsor. The guest star was Hortense Odum, who took over a failing store a few years ago and built it into one of the greatest sources of women's fashions. Kate doesn't have much time for shopping, and she was so impressed by Mrs. Odum's talk that she gave lavish orders for her spring wardrobe then and there.

Peter Lorre, the sinister "Mr. Moto" of Twentieth Century-Fox films is never the victim of practical jokes in Hollywood. Folks out there know he always strikes back. When he was leaving London for America, his director had a big dray horse delivered to him at the last minute as a parting gift. Mr. Lorre sent the horse to a friend's farm, then arranged to have three hundred singing canaries delivered to the director at three in the morning.

Norma Shearer has never forgotten the stars whose pictures thrilled her when she was just getting started in pictures fifteen years ago. She gave the names of some fifty players to the casting director of her "Marie Antoinette" and asked that they should be given roles. It was hard to locate many of them, for in recent years hard luck, poverty, and despondency had dogged their footsteps, but now they are all happily at work.

ODDS AND ENDS—Between scenes of "Island in the Sky" the cast serenaded Toby Doolan with "Nice Work if You Can Get It" because for two days he did nothing but lie still on the floor while a cinema coroner and his assistants pronounced Doolan dead. Warner Brothers are going to feature Olivia de Havilland and Anita Louise in "Studio Club" which they hope will be as great a picture as RKO's "Stage Door." . . . Pick and Pat, radio comedians, are going to make motion pictures for Republic. . . . Although pretty busy conducting the Magic Key and Friday night concert hours, Frank Black found time to stock his one hundred and eighteen acre Pennsylvania farm and now he is actually making money from his prize live stock and chickens. . . . Ronald Colman will return to the screen in "If I Were King," one of the grandest of old costume melodramas. . . . Reed Kennedy, song-shop baritone, is teaching his four young sons to sing for the radio.

HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR TO GIVE CONCERT HERE

The Parkersburg High School choir will give a concert at the Klemme High School gymnasium next Tuesday evening, March 15. The choir is a new experiment at the Parkersburg school where Adolph Lauritzen, a former Klemme boy, is superintendent. The Klemme engagement will be the final appearance of the organization on a short road trip which includes concerts at Applington, Dumont, Latimer and Belmond.

Those interested in high school music activities will see the latest type of dress for vocal groups. The Parkersburg choir will wear the new type of gown or vestment that is rapidly becoming the vogue in high school contest and recital work.

There will be no admission charge, but an offering may be taken up.

Klemme and Vicinity

Lew Lewis and sons, Henry and Verner, were at Britt on business Monday.

Miss Marjorie Toft was a dinner guest Sunday at the home of Mrs. U. G. Smid.

Art Wellemeyer was at Clear Lake on business Tuesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Dorance Day and son, Gary, of Mason City, spent Sunday visiting at the John Day home.

Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and Elmer Trampel spent Saturday in Mason City visiting at the Lyle Lieben-dorfer home.

Mrs. Arthur Wellemeyer has been at Titonka the past week assisting Mr. and Mrs. Donal Bacon with moving.

Mrs. Ben Coobs and Mrs. Verner Lewis were Mason City visitors Thursday.

Otto Schlawn, of Garner, spent Saturday afternoon and evening visiting his mother here, Mrs. Caroline Schlawn.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Mueller and son, Herbert, spent Sunday visiting at the Christ Riebe home at Garner.

Fred J. Arnold, proprietor of the Klemme Auto Company, was forced to take a few days vacation the latter part of the week due to illness.

Kenneth Kluckhohn, who has been at the C. C. C. camp at Leon, Iowa, the past several months came home Saturday for a short vacation.

E. J. Schneider, Klemme, and Howard Dominy, Goodell, returned the first of the week from Illinois, where they visited with relatives for a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Palmby and Mrs. Mort Palmby of Vernon Center, Minnesota, came Saturday and spent Sunday at the Henry Wille home.

Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Dulmes and son, Dick, left Tuesday noon for Adel, Wisconsin, for a visit with Dr. Dulmes' parents. They expect to return home Friday evening.

Miss Nora Wellemeyer has enrolled as a student at the Iowa State Teachers College at Cedar Falls. Ruth Wellemeyer and Novella Bredbenner took her to Cedar Falls last week end.

Mrs. Paul Mueller drove to Garner Monday afternoon to see her mother, Mrs. Christ Riebe, who had fallen and injured herself. However, Mrs. Riebe's injuries were not serious. She fell on the ice when out of doors feeding her chickens and sustained a badly sprained wrist in the fall.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Swanson, who have spent several weeks in the southland, touring the southern states, will start the return journey north next Sunday. However, they do not expect to reach Klemme for another couple of weeks as they will visit with relatives in Illinois before returning home.

SAVE THE MINNOWS

The importance of minnows in Nature's scheme of things is recognized by the State Conservation Commission. They are given protection by law and are propagated by the State for stocking purposes.

During 1937 a total of 1,726,930 minnows were rescued by State Fishery employees from landlocked ponds, bayous and backwaters along Iowa's streams. These small important species of fish were placed in safe waters to perform their duty of assisting in the balancing of Nature. Minnows are a species or kind of fish in themselves and are not small game fish as thought by many. Certain members of the minnow family attain great size, one known to have reached sixty pounds.

Some people are thankful because they have known the delights of love; some because they have not.

SCHOOL ELECTION WILL BE HELD HERE NEXT MONDAY

The Klemme annual school election will be held Monday, March 14th at the town hall, opening at 12:00 o'clock noon and the polls closing at 7:00 p. m.

One director will be chosen for a three year term to succeed C. A. Larsen. Mr. Larsen is a candidate to succeed himself.

Has Mouse Circus

Something out of the ordinary will be found at the Northern Lumber Co. Implement Store. The contraption might be called a "Mouse Circus." A wire cage has been constructed and in the cage is a wheel, something like a wheel in a squirrel cage, and a round table which will spin. A half a dozen or more mice are turned loose in the cage and in scampering about they get on the table and the faster they run, the faster, spins the table. Likewise the mice get inside the revolving wheel and as they run the wheel revolves rapidly.

Birthday Suprise Party Given On Eugene Kluckhohn

Eugene Kluckhohn was sixteen years old Tuesday and in honor of the event his mother, Mrs. Clarence Kluckhohn, successfully carried out a surprise dinner to which were invited Mr. Kingery and the high school basketball squad. The boys presented "Genie" with a handsome gift. The table decorations were carried out in the Shamrock colors of green and white.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

YOU ARE HEREBY NOTIFIED, That an instrument of writing purporting to be the last Will and Testament of Udo G. Smid, Deceased, dated May 14, 1931, having been this day filed, opened and read, Tuesday the 22nd day of March, 1938, is fixed for hearing proof of the same at the Court House in Garner, Iowa, before the District Court of said County, or the Clerk of said Court; and at 2:00 o'clock P. M., of the day above mentioned all persons interested are hereby notified and required to appear, and show cause, if any they have, why said instrument should not be probated and allowed as and for the last Will and Testament of the deceased.

Dated at Garner, Iowa, March 4, 1938.

ELMER RAW,

WHY NOT SPEND IT AT HOME?

During 1937, Americans touring in foreign lands spent approximately $1,497,000,000 in these countries, an indication that all Americans are not broke yet. This sum was the largest spent on foreign travel since 1931 but still $300,000,000 less than the total of 1929. Think of the good that billion and a half dollars might have done at home last year.

Shamrock Juniors Were Downed In Final Battle

HANSELL WINS TOURNAMENT FROM SHAMROCK JUNIORS IN OVERTIME

Supt. Galbreth and his Shamrock Juniors can well feel proud of the showing they made in the district grade school tournament held at Belmont last week.

The Shamrock Juniors displayed a superior brand of basketball which carried them through to the finals when they met the highly rated team from Hansell and in this final battle the regular play period ended in a deadlock, Hansell winning in the overtime period.

The Shamrock Juniors have the makings of a good high school team in the near future. The scoring was well divided among the

KLEMMME WELL REPRESENTED AT STATE BASKETBALL TOURNAMENT

Klemme was well represented at the state basketball tournament, especially on Thursday when there were sixteen Klemme fans among the vast crowd. Those who attended Thursday only for the eight games were Coach A. L. Kingery, Dorance Grange, "Gene" Kluckhohn, Verner Lau, Ruben Grosshuesch, LaRayne Stille, Harold Wicks, all on the squad, Levi Ridder, Glenn Bridges, Lyndon Kilgore, and Kermit Koerner. Mr. and Mrs. Orville Stokesbury, Ray Jorgenson, Jr., Paul Schuldt and Elmer Trampel took in the entire tournament. Friday Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kingery and Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer drove down for the remainder of the games. In all there were nine Shamrock players who attended the games this year and had an opportunity to see some fine ball handlers in action.

American Legion Auxiliary Notes

Thirteen members met at the home of Mrs. P. W. Johnson Thursday for the regular March meeting.

The Auxiliary voted to hold a bake sale and sale of articles which have been purchased from the Veterans' Hospital at Knoxville.

Handicraft articles made by disabled veterans are being sold throughout the country this year by the American Legion Auxiliary, according to Mrs. Leafy Coobs, rehabilitation chairman of the local Auxiliary Unit. The articles are made largely in the occupational therapy departments of veterans' hospitals as part of the hospital treatment and the work is of great benefit in promoting recovery of disabled men.

A high degree of skill is developed by the disabled veterans, and many articles of beauty and utility are produced. Weaving, brass work, leather work, basketry and pottery are among the crafts practiced by the men. Articles are decorated with original designs and made with painstaking care.

These will be on display at the Klemme Food Market several days preceding the sale, which will be March 26th.

The afternoon was spent in sewing carpet rags for the Knoxville carpet weaving shop, connected with the hospital.

Refreshments were served at the close of the afternoon by the hostess.

Watch for ad next week.

Standard Bearers Met

The Standard Bearer girls of the M. E. Church met in the church parlors Tuesday evening. Miss Wallace and Juanita Pavey were the hostesses.

After the business meeting and "pot-luck" lunch the girls had their evening study of the value of scientific medicine and how doctors and nurses win people's souls for Christ by healing their bodies. Patty Kudje was a guest for supper and appeared in the story of "Black Tents".

Miss Bena Beek, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hemo Beek of near Klemme, and Mr. John Van Osten, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Van Osten of near Meservey, were united in marriage at the Klemme Reformed Church on Wednesday evening, March 9th at 8:00 o'clock. Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, who performed the rites, used the single ring ceremony.

The bride wore a tailored blue suit and her attendant, Miss Katie Beek of Ventura, wore a blue crepe dress. The groom wore the conventional dark blue and the best man, Melvin Hollatz of Clear Lake, wore a gray suit.

The young couple, who are well known in this community, will reside on a farm northwest of Meservey, where they will be at home to their many friends.

Local Funeral Directors Adds New Equipment To Service

CHAPEL TENT ADDED TO MODERN SERVICES OFFERED BY WELLEMMEYER

Art Wellemeyer, funeral director, has purchased a Chapel Tent for use at the cemetery when conducting funeral services. This modern piece of equipment is the very latest in Chapel tents and is an improved design. Special chairs are also provided for the services at the cemetery.

A new funeral coach of the latest type was recently added to the services provided by Mr. Wellemeyer.

GIRL SCOUT NEWS

March began the new Girl Scout year in Klemme. The Cloverleaf and Sunflower patrols held their first birthday party at Jacqueline Kudje's. Supt. Baggs Announces Plans For Annual Spell

SPELLING CONTEST HERE WON BY MELVIN COOBS

Melvin Coobs will represent Klemme in the annual Hancock County spelling bee to be held at Garner. Runner-up in the contest was Betty Etchen.

Others who were listed with the high ten were Billy Zabilka, 3rd; Elwyn Jacobs, 4th; Leonard Kaduce, 5th; Billy Grosshuesch, 6th; Charles Bock, 7th; Homer Blickenderfer, 8th; Ellen Kilgore, 9th and Lawrence Bock, 10th.

All of the lower grades conducted a spelling bee Friday afternoon.

Spelling Contest Held Friday In Avery Township Rural Schools

The Avery Township rural schools held a spelling contest at the District No. 8 school east of Goodell, Friday afternoon. Five schools were represented and prizes were awarded.

Ardella Nelson of District No. 2, where Miss Viola Koehler is teaching, won first in the 5-6-7-8 grade division. Ivan Blumer of District No. 3, where Novella Bredbenner is teaching, won first in the 1-2-3-4 grade division. District No. 3 won six out of the fourteen prizes awarded.

KLEMMME YOUNG MEN RETURNED FROM TRIP TO OLD MEXICO

Clair West and Clarence Kluckhohn, Jr., returned last Thursday from a 4,000 mile trip which took them through the south and into old Mexico. Leaving Klemme they went south via Kansas City and Dallas, Texas and into Mexico.

At Monterey, Mexico their car was smashed into by a Mexican and they were forced to remain there three days for repairs. The Mexican was arrested and forced to pay the damages on West's car. They enjoyed the stay at Monterey where there were many interesting things to see.

The stay at Monterey delayed their trip and their plans to drive to Mexico City were thwarted. However, they drove south a number of miles beyond Monterey.

Scenery through Mexico was beautiful and interesting.

Returning northward they stopped for a visit with the Paul Stille family at DeRidder, Louisiana and again stopped at Springfield, Mo., for a visit with Jack Wellemeyer and wife.

The men report that Mexico is slow and backward and still clings to many old customs such as using burros for transportation and field work and using a pointed stick for plowing.

Touring through Mexico is comparatively cheap as the Mexicans have not yet awakened to the fact that Americans have money to spend.

Brouwer Children Gather At Home Of Grandma Schlawin

All of the Brouwer children gathered last Wednesday evening at the home of Grandma Schlawin and all enjoyed a visit and had a lunch of ice cream and cake. Those present were: Mrs. Clyde Carrier and two children of Strawberry Point; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Brouwer, Mr. and Mrs. Ben V. Greimann and Ray Brouwer, Garner; Art Brouwer and family of Hayfield; Mr. and Mrs. Ira Holt and sons, Mason City, and Harvey Barz and family of Klemme.

COUNTY SPELLING CONTEST TO BE IN GARNER SATURDAY, MARCH 19TH

The Hancock County Spelling Contest will be held in the High School Building in Garner, Saturday, March 19th beginning at 2:00 o'clock P. M. Every school in the county, rural, town and parochial is entitled to one representative each. The Garner Lions Club will award ten dollars in prizes. The winner of the first prize will receive $5.00; second, $2.00; third, $1.00; fourth, fifth and sixth, 50c; seventh and eighth, 25c each. The winner of the county contest will represent Hancock County in the statewide spelling bee to be held in Des Moines, Saturday, April 23rd, sponsored by the Des Moines Register and Tribune.

The state winner will then go to Washington D. C. to represent Iowa in the National Bee. The teacher of the champion will also be sent to the nation's capital with all expenses paid. After the national spelling bee, the rest of the week will be devoted to sightseeing trips about the city of Washington and Mt. Vernon. The second prize offered in the state contest is fifty dollars.

Think of the fun of winning the Iowa championship. Imagine being sent by the Des Moines Register and Tribune all the way to Washington D. C. so you can spell for Iowa against the best spellers from all over the United States. Think of the thrill you'd get if you won the national championship and $500.00. Three Iowa spellers who have won national prizes are Helen Jensen of Council Bluffs, in 1930; Dorothy Greenwalt of Muscatine County, in 1932 and Jean Trowbridge of Guthrie Center, in 1936.

In previous state contests held in Des Moines, Hancock County has had representatives who have won prizes near the top of the list. Let us make it first this year.

Role of Glands in Mental Disease Is Unsolved Problem

By MARJORIE VAN DE WATER

New York.—One of the most puzzling problems faced by the scientist exploring man's mind is the role played by the powerful glands of the human body.

A matter of demonstrated fact is the knowledge that these glands serve as chemical factories, pouring out potent substances capable of changing the whole behavior of the individual. Presence or lack of a glandular chemical may make a person energetic or lazy, submissive or rebellious, mentally alert or stupid.

That the endocrine glands occupy a place of power in determining the mental soundness or illness of the individual has long been suspected by physicians and psychologists. Glandular disorders have been noted in the mentally ill and to some this has meant that the glands could be blamed for the mental illness. Others, reversing the relationship, see the emotional strains of mental disease as effective in throwing the endocrine system out of balance.

Actual Proof Lacking.

Actually, medical science today has no crucial evidence of any cause and effect relationship between the powerful glands of internal secretion and mental disease or mental deficiency. Dr. Hugh T. Carmichael, psychiatrist of the University of Chicago medical school, told his colleagues at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

A recent survey showed that of a group of about 300 mental patients selected for endocrine diagnosis and treatment more than a third were so improved that they were able to leave the institution. But do not jump to the conclusion that it was gland treatment that saved them. Further analysis showed only 17 per cent of those selected for endocrine diagnosis actually had anything wrong with their glands and less than half of these had adequate gland treatment. In addition many of those "cured" had a type of mental disease that often disappears spontaneously.

Mental disease and mental deficiencies are common. So also are glandular imbalances. That they are often found in the same individual could be simply a matter of chance.

The role of the endocrines is still an unsolved problem and presents a fruitful field for future research.

Nose Spray Helps Prevent Infantile Paralysis

Washington.—New research, which gives a clue to the mechanism that gives immunity to infantile paralysis and seems to show that spraying of the nose with chemical or other germ-fighting agents will eventually prove the means of preventing this crippling malady was reported at the meetings of the Society of American Bacteriologists here.

In actual practice with children, the method has so far not been anything like 100 per cent successful. But from reports presented it appears that the method is fundamentally sound and that success is only a matter of perfecting details, such as finding the best substance to spray and the surest way of getting the spray onto the strategic area.

The lining of the nose appears to be the key to the situation. Not only does the virus of the disease enter the body through this lining, but resistance to the virus develops naturally in this lining. This last important point appears from research reported by Drs. Albert B. Sabin and Peter K. Orlitsky of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

Of all the chemicals they tested, zinc sulphate was the most effective.

Ship's Officer Sees Two Moons in the Tropics

Washington.—Ordinarily, if a seafaring man in the tropics sees two moons he discreetly says nothing about the matter, lest a cynical world raise an eyebrow and murmur something about too many swizzles. But Third Officer R. T. Lewin of the American steamer Yorkmar saw a double image of the moon recently for which an abnormal refractive condition of the earth's atmosphere was responsible.

Mr. Lewin observed the strange phenomenon during a run from Balboa, C. Z., to San Pedro, Calif., while his ship was off the tip of Lower California. The crescent moon was going down through a thin haze, when it appeared double, the lower crescent scarcely touching the upper. Twenty minutes after he first noticed it, the moon set, still appearing double.

Most of Us "Queer" According to the Ink Blot Test

Indianapolis.—There is scientific confirmation of the widespread idea that most of us are a bit queer—except me and thee, of course.

It has popped up in the queerest of places, in ink blots that are made with a scientific purpose. It is quite a psychological game, much like trying to see what you can make of the flickering flames of an open fire on a cold winter's evening, or what creatures are hiding in the clouds of a summer's day.

Your imagination seems to bring to the surface things you unconsciously subdued. And it seems that trying to see pictures in smears of ink or floating clouds or flames may be quite as dangerous as telling your dreams to a Freudian.

Dr. James Vaughn of the University of Cincinnati gave the Rorschach ink blot test (that's what it is called, after the psychologist who devised it) to 43 patients in mental disease hospitals, all of whom had paranoid tendencies and thought people were persecuting them when they were not. He also gave it to 52 college students.

Difference in Degree.

Imagine his surprise when he found that many of the apparently normal students showed unusual character in the forms they saw, for seeing such forms has been taken as an indication of mental derangement.

"One can hardly escape the conclusion that insanity is a difference in degree and not in kind," Dr. Vaughn told the American Association for the Advancement of Science meeting. "The degree seems important."

The idea that a thing is bigger and better just because it belongs to the Good Old U. S. A. received support from tests by another psychologist, Dr. Heinz Ansbacher of Columbia university. He used postage stamps in his investigations.

After the possible influence of size, shape, color and other postage stamp features had been eliminated, Dr. Ansbacher was able to prove that sheer acceptance of the stamp as a stamp of one's own country gives it an apparent size greater than that of the stamp of some other country.

If the trifling matter of postage stamp size is affected in this way, how fundamentally, argues Dr. Ansbacher, is our personality as a whole determined by the people and surroundings in which we live and are reared.

Flight Strips Proposed on Highways for Airplanes

Cleveland.—Desperate hunts for landing fields, with the gas getting low and the fog closing in, may be a thing of the past for airline pilots, if the scheme proposed to the thirty-fifth annual convention of the American Road Builders association by Lieut. Col. Stedman S. Hanks is adopted. Instead of cruising around hunting for a place to land, pilots of the future will hunt a highway, and set their planes down on "flight strips" built beside the main roads by the highway departments.

Proposed not only as emergency landing fields, but for the use of private pilots, these paved strips beside main highways, at least 200 feet wide and 1,800 feet long, built and maintained by highway engineers, on state-owned land, may also be used as way-stations, from which air mail and air freight may be picked up by arrangement.

Chest Pains Often Due to Great Overweight

San Francisco.—Severe chest pain resembling that of the dread heart malady, angina pectoris, is in many cases due to excessive overweight, Dr. William J. Kerr, professor of medicine in the University of California medical school, has found.

The huge pot belly or "bay window" of very fat men forces them to adopt an abnormal posture which cramps the chest, causing breathlessness and preventing the heart from getting a normal supply of oxygen. Severe pain and low blood pressure accompany the condition.

The pain and other features clear up when the weight is reduced and the posture brought back to normal, Dr. Kerr found. Diet, exercises and properly fitted abdominal belts are used in the treatment.

Cellulose Film Protects House From Winter Cold

Storrs, Conn.—Cellulose film wrappers, that now protect packs of cigarettes and nickel candy bars, will presently be fortifying whole houses against winter cold, if the method developed by the Yankee ingenuity of Prof. R. H. Wallace of Connecticut State college here works out as well as it seems to promise.

Not that the whole house will be wrapped in the transparent sheets. That isn't necessary. But windows, outside cellar doors, and other warmth-wasting openings, Professor Wallace has found, can be effectively insulated against the cold with cellulose film.

The method is especially valuable for greenhouses, Professor Wallace states.

New "Dead" Ball Gets Once Over

National league pitchers may look upon the new "dead" ball as a boon that will prevent batting sprees by opposing teams. These three pitchers of the New York Giants, Hal Schumacher, left, Cliff Melton, center, and Carl Hubbell, are shown looking at the new ball at their spring training camp at Hot Springs, Ark. The new "dead" ball was selected for the 1938 season in the National league at a meeting of club presidents several months ago. At that time the American league decided to retain the so-called lively ball. The dead ball is expected to reduce the advantage which hitters have enjoyed for several years over pitchers and result in a return of base-stealing and "tight" baseball.

Members of the police force, the army and storm troops practice grenade throwing on skis, by using small clubs shaped like the deadly weapons. To make the exercises more interesting, the training takes the form of a contest.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fall to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. THIS THING CALLED SWING

America Goes Primitive to Rhythmic Tunes of the 'Cats'

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

A bunch of the cats were pickin' their chops and friskin' their whiskers, just aching for a jam session. Up on the stage a long underwear gang was banding out sweet and sticky schmaltz while a monkey waved his baton. The alligators didn't like it either.

No, Genevieve, this is not a description of open house at the zoo—it's just a picturesque way of saying that an audience of dissatisfied patrons in a New York night spot are hungry for that indefinable, primitive and captivating type of alleged music called "swing."

The "cats" are swing musicians, rhythm-mad boys who, "lickin' their chops," and "friskin' their whiskers," indicate a desire for an impromptu gathering of their ilk to play for the fun of it, otherwise known as a "jam session." The "long underwear gang" they despise might be Guy Lombardo's orchestra, famous for its smooth and restful tunes (otherwise, "schmaltz"). Lombardo himself, the director, might be the "monkey."

A BIT FAMILIAR

To youth it is a new delight but to middle-aged Americans it has a strangely familiar beat, reminiscent of something they heard 15 or 20 years ago, before what is known as "jazz" attained respectability. Those were the days when jazz was "hot," when polite society frowned on it as primitive and uncivilized. It was before George Gershwin wrote "Rhapsody in Blue," before jazz symphonized itself and fell under such artistic control that it was no longer free and natural. When that day arrived it ceased to be jazz, ranking as something unreal and unprecedented, something that had no reason to exist and therefore soon expired.

Swing took its place. And swing is nothing more than the original Dixieland jazz, a second wave of the throbbing, carefree rhythm which New Orleans' shanties and honky-tonks discovered 20 years

THE MASTER OF THEM ALL—Benny Goodman, the king of swing, with the "agony stick" that helped discredit "sweet" jazz and brought America a new era of hot music. Or is it music?

Grofe and Paul Whiteman were at the height of their popularity as exponents of the hated symphonic jazz and "schmaltz."

Goodman played for years with other bands, unhappy because he was forced to restrain himself and produce "commercial" music, sweet and restrained tunes that were popular with the customers but sickening to musicians. In 1931 he tried his own band but it flopped because of the Gershwin-Grofe-Whiteman influence. In 1934, nauseated, he organized another outfit that was fired from Billy Rose's Music Hall in New York. In the nick of time a large commercial radio show picked him up. Next came a Manhattan hotel engagement which closed because the customers weren't prepared for hot music. The skies were again dark until Fate intervened one night at the Palomar ballroom in Los Angeles and swing began an overnight stampede to popularity!

SWING DEFINED

We'll guess with you—what is the mystic element of swing that makes some people stamp their feet and shout, that makes other people sit tensely listening for every note as if life itself depended on it?

Gene Krupa, popular drummer with Goodman's band, says swing is "complete and inspired freedom of rhythmic interpretation." Which means that you don't follow music; instead you create and improvise as ago. This second wave seems vengeful, determined to punish the faithless first wave which went astray and made itself respectable. In the last two years it has traveled by river boat up the Mississippi to St. Louis, squirmed its way into Chicago night life and spread throughout America like a flood.

Riding the crest of this wave has been a bespectacled young man to whom swing is a semi-sacred Cause, an orchestra leader who tossed it right in the laps of New York's social elite by staging a concert at sophisticated Carnegie hall a few weeks ago!

His name is Benny Goodman, and although the Carnegie hall concert prompted one critic to change the name from Manhattan to "Madhattan," he will continue to play hot music until the Cause is won or the battle lost.

SUCCESS STORY

Though still youthful, Goodman is a jazz man of the old school. He got his start in Chicago with the late Leon Bismarck (Bix), Beiderbecke, great trumpet and piano man of the early days who played with such outfits as Frankie Trumbauer and Jean Goldkette. Beiderbecke's recordings are still coveted by patrons of the hot music school. He died in 1931 when George Gershwin, Ferde you go along. Any selection from a Beethoven sonata to "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen" is presumably swingable but we'd just as soon they'd let Beethoven alone.

SPREADING THE JAM

Though critics scorn swing as an "art," the musicians themselves have demonstrated a positively artistic regard for their profession. Swing, unlike Gershwin jazz, will thrive without glamor. Some of America's most able "cats" are found in such small and out-of-the-way places as Chicago's "Three Deuces" night club.

The "Three Deuces," like other swing spots, was once famous for its "jam sessions." Nightly, after other clubs had closed their doors, musicians from world famous orchestras made this dark basement their rendezvous, treating the customers to impromptu swing concerts that made the welkin ring. The Chicago musician's union put a stop to this delightful custom, but it still prevails in many a Harlem night club.

But it remains true that some of America's ablest musicians are swing enthusiasts. Seldom does one find faster or more talented hands than those of Teddy Wilson, Goodman's pianist, nor can many trumpet men approach Roy Eldridge's crystal-clear high notes without using a mute.

What will happen to swing? As the "alligators" become more numerous and historians announce that this primitive music is only a second edition of the early jazz, it becomes increasingly possible that swing may also try to get respectable and thereby kill itself. Swing is already tremendously successful. Already it is appearing in New York's finer hotels, far removed from the smoky atmosphere in which it developed.

WILL IT STAGNATE?

Soon may come the stagnation that usually seizes arts patronized by the well-to-do. It will be sponsored and supported. Swingmen will, without realizing, develop a codified technique and a set of rules to which all music must conform before it can be called swing.

True exponents of swing will not be frightened by this prediction. When they gather 'round tonight and "go out of the world," watching hundreds of the faithful cock an attentive ear to the music, all fears will be cast aside.

Even though the current swing craze does give way to the respectable jazz of future George Gershwin and Ferde Grofes, it will probably return at a later date. For the New Orleans honky-tonks will always be loyal and the tom-tom rhythm that beats within a negro's breast must find expression. Then will come a third wave, and the "alligators" will be happy again!

Lesson for March 20

KEEPING THE BODY STRONG

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:53-56; Judg. 13:12-14; I Cor. 3:16, 17; Rom. 12:1, 2. GOLDEN TEXT—Now therefore beware, I pray thee; and drink not wine nor strong drink, and eat not any unclean thing.—Judg. 13:4.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Body God Gave Us

JUNIOR TOPIC—For Jesus' Sake.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Wine, Liquor, Drugs, and Tobacco Do to Health.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Intemperance Affects Health.

The universe of God is perfectly organized in every respect. Beings that function in the spirit realm are spirit beings, not subject to the limitations of the physical world. We who dwell and serve in the physical world are equipped with physical bodies which are ideal instruments for our present existence.

With all their shortcomings and frailties, our bodies are indeed marvelous machines, intricate and delicate, yet unbelievably hardy and durable. They are a gift from God, and it is our express responsibility to glorify God in our bodies (I Cor. 6:20).

I. How to Have a Strong Body.

It is obvious that not every one has equal physical strength and health. In some measure this is by divine providence or at least by God's permissive will, and those of us who find ourselves thus limited do well to count on His grace for patience to use what we have for His glory. But not one of us wants to yield hopelessly to our inability. Rather we will do our best to overcome it. We want to know

1. How to cure weakness (Mark 6:53-56).

God alone can heal the sick. Even in our day when science has made such strides in the healing art, we note that the most successful remedy or system of treatment is the one that clears the way for what men call nature, but we know to be God, to work. Jesus healed the multitudes in the land of Gennesaret; He heals in America.

2. How to prevent weakness (Judg. 13:12-14).

The mother of Samson, who was to be a Nazarite, was to drink no wine and to observe careful dietary regulations before he was born. Note also that if it is bad for a man to have such poisons in his veins before he is born, surely it is poor judgment to put them in after he comes to the age where he controls his own life. We need to watch our diets, and we have much valuable help on that point. We also need to give serious attention to the use of narcotics. It may surprise some to know that the term narcotics includes not only drugs and alcoholic beverages, but also tobacco, and such common things as tea and coffee.

Other abuse of the body, such as overwork, neglect of rest, etc., may well be mentioned. The besetting sin of some Christian workers is the destruction of their bodies, the very temple of the Holy Ghost, by overwork.

II. How to Use a Strong Body.

Unfortunately as it is to observe that some who would serve the Lord have to struggle with the weakness of the body, it is far sadder to note that all too often those who have strong bodies forget to use that strength for God. Our Scripture portions give us two excellent guiding principles. Our bodies should be

1. Kept for God (I Cor. 3:16, 17).

These verses refer to the body of the Christian, for only of him can it be said that his body is the temple of the Holy Ghost.

The Holy Spirit is a person, the third person of the blessed Trinity. He comes to dwell within the soul of the Christian immediately upon his being regenerated, thus making his body the temple of the Holy Ghost. A clear grasp of that truth solves the problem of what we should do with and for our bodies. We must keep them well and clean. We dare not defile them in any way. The body of the Christian is kept for God.

2. Yielded to God (Rom. 12:1, 2).

It is a high and noble sacrifice to die for Christ. But our call just now is to be a "living sacrifice." There are times when that may seem harder than to be a martyr. We do know that it is not always easy to live through the drab, difficult, and sometimes dreadful days, with a clear and shining testimony for Christ. But it can be done and is always to His glory. It is by the transforming grace of God that we are enabled to live such a life.

Meditation

It is the mark of a superior man that, left to himself, he is able endlessly to amuse, interest and entertain himself out of his personal stock of meditations, ideas, criticisms, memories, philosophy, humor and what not.—George Nathan.

Like Unto Him

"There should be no greater comfort to Christian persons than to be made like unto Christ by suffering patiently adversities, troubles, and sickness.

Fashions Bloom in Spring

EXCEPTIONALLY smart new things for yourself and your daughter, that you'll enjoy making right now, and wearing on into the summer. Yes, even if you've never done much sewing, you'll enjoy working from our simple, easy-to-follow patterns, each accompanied by a complete and detailed sew chart. Hundreds of beginners are saving money, and creating really individual clothes, by making their own this season.

The Charming Basque.

Here's a perfect design for slim, youthful figures. The snug basque top, above a full, rippling skirt, is dramatized by little puff sleeves. Think how delightful it will look, made up in a plain or printed material that is colorful.

Little Girl's Dress, With Doll.

Yes, this pattern brings you directions for making the little girl's dress, the doll, and a dress for the doll just like her small mama's. Just think how all that newness will make your little daughter dance with joy. The child's dress is a darling, with its full skirt, pockets, puff sleeves and round collar. Make it up in printed percale or gingham. Old-fashioned rickrack braid would be pretty to trim it.

The Classic Shirtwaist.

This is distinctly a woman's version of the indispensable shirtwaist dress, gracious, slenderizing and dignified. The shoulders are beautifully smooth and the skirt has exactly the correctly tailored, straight effect. It's so easy to make, and looks so smart, that you'll want it now in sheer wool or light-weight flannel, and later in tub silk or linen.

The Patterns.

1471 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 (32) requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, with ¾ yard of contrast for collar. Belt not included.

1411 is designed for sizes 2, 3, 4 and 5 years. Size 3 requires 1¾

TIPS to Gardeners

Miscellaneous Tips

BEFORE planting, work soil deeply, making the top three or four inches as fine and loose as possible.

For better germination, pour water into the drill or furrow just before sowing. Use enough water to moisten the soil, but not enough to cause caking.

If you have had little experience and wish to try the vegetables easiest to grow, select radishes, carrots, beets, Swiss chard, and turnips. With a good-sized garden you might add spinach, peas, beans and corn.

If your garden is small and you wish to increase the total yield, try the following quick-growing vegetables:

Radish, leaf lettuce, beets, carrots, peas and beans. You can replant most of these after space has been made for them by early harvest.

Do not plant seeds deeper than directed. After planting cover seeds immediately, pressing the soil down firmly.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2

These second graders were in the spelling contest on Friday. Rose Schaefer, William Montgomery, Joyce Beatty, Esther Hartbeck and Donna Mae Heivilin.

We have been studying about Holland. We have colored Holland pictures written charts and learned songs about Dutch children.

The second graders had a speed test in numbers on Friday.

GRADES 3 AND 4

We are sorry to report that Clarence Larsen is sick with scarlet fever. Edward Kaduce is not able to be in school as his sister has scarlet fever.

Mrs. Kngery was our teacher last Thursday.

Friday we had our spelling contest. Roger Ridder won the award for the third grade and Ruth Bell for the fourth.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Corrine Merkel and Junior Buntensch—reporters

We have started a new health contest with Barbara Johnson and Edward Barz as captains.

Eunice is absent because her brother has scarlet fever. We hope she won't get it.

We started new graphs for spelling this week. The people who started their graphs out with perfect scores are Herbert S., Betty Blickenderfer, Ewald Grosshuesch, Duard Lewis, Edward Barz and Julia Bell.

All of the four sixth graders who are in school were in the spelling contest Friday afternoon. The following fifth graders spelled: Edward, Patricia, Junior, Ewald, Herbert S. and Wesley.

Junior and Duard have been playing in the basketball tournament at Belmond.

GRADES 7 AND 8

Melvin Coobs received a perfect score in the twelfth Self-Testing Drill in arithmetic. This is the first perfect score we have had in our room this year.

In civics in the eighth grade we are studying the constitution of the United States. We have reviewed the history of the constitution, learned the preamble, and we are going to read the constitution carefully.

We had a spell down to choose the contestants who would represent our grades in the contest on Friday. Betty Etchen, Billy Grosshuesch, Leonard Kaduce, Elwyn Jacobs and Edwin Tiggeman represented the seventh grade. Melvin Coobs, Charles Bock, Ellen Kilgore, Homer Blickenderfer and Billy Zabalka represented the 8th grade.

H. S. Vocational Talks Given

A farmer can no longer merely work on without any knowledge of the products he is raising and the way they should be taken care of, according to Mr. Peterson, our county agent, who spoke to us Wednesday morning. Farming is becoming more and more of a profession every year.

Mr. Peterson pointed out that one of the main problems of a farmer is soil conservation. The two most important elements of soil conservation are the prevention of erosion and the maintenance of soil fertility.

Iowa contains twenty-five percent of the good land in the United States. Is it any wonder that it is such an agricultural state?

Wednesday the high school heard Mr. Wellemeyer who talked to us about the subject of undertaking as a profession.

VIGOR OF HYBRID CORN VANISHES SECOND YEAR

Tests Show Yield May Drop As Much As 40 Per Cent If Seed Is Saved From Hybrids

The farmer who plants second generation hybrid corn with expectations of "just as good a crop as I had the first year" is bound to be disappointed, warns E. S. Dyas, Iowa State College extension agronomist.

"Hybrid corn loses 10 to 20 percent of its vigor the second year—practically all of the advantage it had over the open pollinated corn in the first place," he says.

The reason is that a certain percentage of the kernels in the "first year crop" are inbred weaknesses appear in generation.

Experiments have been conducted at the Iowa Experiment Station exactly how much the in the second generation. But because of the tests have not been continuously.

Data from two different experiments, however, show striking in yield running as high as 100 percent. The loss is apparent in drouth years.

There are two sides to the domestic question. The side and the side takes.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON D. C.

Washington—Congress has just passed another relief appropriation for the current year. This, like the earlier vote of funds, was done at the request of the President.

The new sum is $250,000,000. Since the first appropriation for the current year was a billion and a half, we now find that federal relief during the current fiscal year will have cost at least $1,750,000,000. It may be added that the sum mentioned is in addition to local charity, community chests, etc., and also that it has been, or is being, spent in a period five years after we were told that the nation was about to be remade under New Deal ideals.

Now, it is a rather far cry from relief, the care of the aged and infirm, the destitute, to the question of politics. That is, it appears only to be a great gap between those two phases of national life. I insist it is very close; that there is no gap at all. I reach that conclusion because never before in history has there been such use of basic economics as in the last four or five years. That is to say, politicians have turned to questions of economics for their political buncombe—and it ought to be added that when a politician tries to do something with fundamental questions, just there begins a grand mess.

All of which brings us to the point of this discussion. When President Roosevelt went into the White House in March, 1933, he was confronted with probably the most unfavorable conditions, insofar as business conditions were concerned, that any President ever has faced. He called for a New Deal in handling the situation, and he obtained almost unanimous support. Indeed, as we look back at that situation, the support was too nearly unanimous. He had no opposition to point out weaknesses of what was proposed by the responsible officials. I think I recall having written at that time that a stronger opposition would have been good for the country. Some of the pitfalls would have been avoided, I am sure, if congress had not been so subservient and if the President had not yielded so completely to the theories of advisers who had no practical experience.

The people of the nation were in a mood to listen to anyone. They heard new phrases of what can and should be done—the more abundant life, the economic royalists, the crushers of the poor, and on and on. But the trouble with the professor-advisers was that they ignored or did not know of another side to the story. In short, they believed that human nature had changed overnight and that a nation could be managed or directed or ordered as an individual. It has taken several years to re-establish natural facts and natural laws, but they seem now to be approaching that re-establishment through the processes that normally must be followed in a nation, as distinguished from an individual.

So, what do we have? I think the answer is that we have an administration headed by a man who is the victim of the advisers he selected. I believe it can be said that politically President Roosevelt is just as uncertain about where he is going as is the rank and file of citizens about where the nation is going. But he selected those advisers and, for the most part, continues to give them his confidence. They are still on the job. And in no better way has it been shown that they are utterly incapable of meeting national problems than is shown in the business of relief. Relief is more than just the care of those who must have help. Relief is a condition reflecting other conditions. The President and his theorists, therefore, must be charged directly with having failed. We have almost as many unemployed or under government aid as we had when Mr. Roosevelt took office.

I suppose someone will write to me asking what can be, or what should be done about it. Anticipating that query, I will attempt to answer now, but I want to illustrate it.

A friend of mine has been ill for several years with an intestinal ailment. Physicians to the number of a dozen or more have studied the case. Finally, the use of a drastic remedy, a potent and almost poisonous drug, was prescribed. The doctor began by ordering the patient to take three drops, only three, at the start. The dose was increased gradually. In the last few weeks, my friend has taken fifty drops of the drug each day.

There is no assurance that the ailment will be eliminated. There can not be a determination for many months because the treatment is entirely new in medical annals. Thus far, there has been no appreciable change in the patient's condition. But the point is, after all, that a professional man who has devoted years to the study of a science would not attempt to cure a basic condition without first providing opportunity for the human body to adjust itself to the new conditions.

Now, I am somewhat old fashioned and hold to the belief that a whole nation of people, after all, will make progress if given the chance to do so. I further believe that their collective reasoning in the end will be right. They can not, however, be turned inside out unless there has been some preparation for the ordeal and they can not take a dose which is poisonous in quantity any more than my friend, the individual, could take it and live. In making that statement, I must make clear my conviction that some of the New Deal prescriptions were needed. A few of them were badly needed. On the other hand, I think it can be fairly asserted that a good many of them were never needed, never were usable or workable. They were poisons not intended by nature to be so administered to the national body.

We can go further. It can be said that no individual who is ill can work efficiently, if at all. That is true of our economic life which includes business. And business is everywhere—from the smallest general store at the crossroads near my Missouri birthplace to the gigantic Marshall Field company in Chicago, General Motors in New York, Aluminum company in Pittsburgh, or hundreds of thousands of others. Business can not get going at its proper pace if it is ill.

The business of the country has something more than its own body, however, as a problem to constantly watch. That general store that I mentioned may not be much concerned about Washington affairs, but it feels the impact of things done at Washington whether it recognizes them or not. The larger concerns, of course, feel Washington actions much more directly. So, in addition to the influence of markets, buying and selling of or among the general public, business is influenced by what is done here in Washington, and that may be bad medicine or good medicine.

Let us take just one or two examples of what I mean. One of the Biblical proverbs of the New Deal was the necessity for a law providing what the theorists were pleased to call "social security." That includes old age pensions. New Deal campaigners sang many beautiful songs about caring for the aged, and certainly there are millions who have needed help. When it came to practical application of the plan, however, the boys started looking for the necessary money. Thus arose the so-called payroll tax for unemployment and old age pensions.

It sounded workable to many persons. It was a thing for the future and there was not too much worry about the problem of where those who were to pay the tax would get the money. The time has arrived, however, where the beautiful theory is a perfectly enormous practical problem.

The first year's "take" by the government amounts to something over a billion dollars. Some of it, almost half, comes out of the pay envelopes of the workers; the remainder comes out of the pockets of the employers. It is turned over to "Washington" and when money gets into government hands it becomes unproductive. The result has been that in the last year there has been taken away from its owners more than a billion dollars that would have added at least a billion dollars to the buying power of the country if it had been left with the proper owners. That is one of the big reasons for the Roosevelt depression, as distinguished from the Hoover depression obtaining when the present administration took over the reins of government. It was a dose of 50 drops when the country was able to stand only a few drops.

To get back to relief: I have argued in these columns many times that relief should be handled by the states and, equally, I think the old age pension and unemployment benefits, if they are to be used, should be handled by the states. My point is that Professional Reliever Hopkins, here in Washington, can not know through any organization he may build what the facts are surrounding any of the thousands receiving help.

Something that can be done is to eliminate about one third of this general money spending that is going on here in Washington or out in the various states under direction from Washington. I wish Mr. Roosevelt had stuck to his campaign promise of 1932 to cut federal expenses by 25 per cent. The tragedy of this spending is that it saddles debt on the younger folks and those yet unborn for several generations. It has to end somewhere.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

GROWN-UP motion picture players feel terribly neglected these days. They figured that when the first excitement over the animated drawings that make up "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" was over they would come back into the limelight again.

But along came the world's beloved blockhead, Charlie McCarthy, in "Goldwyn Follies" to distract attention from mere humans, and next "The River," a picture without any actors whatever became the talk of the entertainment world. Now mere children have romped in and taken all the attention away from their elders.

Judy Garland, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's fourteen-year-old singing star, is enjoying huge success on a personal appearance tour, and the even-younger Tommy Kelly and Ann Gillis of "Tom Sawyer" have captivated several cities they have visited. They had the great thrill of being received informally at the White House, they visited Mark Twain's home town to place a wreath on his grave, and in between times they saw the sights of New York.

June Lang, Ethel Merman, and Cesar Romero have been flying all over the country attending openings of "In Old Chicago" and audiences were so appreciative of the opportunity to see players face to face that Twentieth Century-Fox plans to stage gala openings for many of their pictures in the future. You won't have to go to Hollywood or New York to attend openings with the stars in the future.

Three young men singers have become big radio favorites in the past few weeks and by next year radio executives figure they will all be top-ranking stars. John Carter, who replaced Nelson Eddy on the Charlie McCarthy hour, is an ex-farmer and vaudeville dancer. Felix Knight, who in addition to his own Sunday morning program has been appearing with Leo Reisman's orchestra, comes from Florida, via Hollywood, and is much too young to have had any career other than singing. Glenn Darwin, the rich-toned barytone whom you have probably heard on the Magic Key program, was a famous soprano at the age of nine. He made a record of "Ave Maria" then that is still held up as a model of perfection to choir boys.

Fred Allen used to work in the Boston Public library, carrying books to the folks who requested them. Eddie Cantor was errand boy for a sausage factory. Phil Baker was secretary to a motion picture producer, Walter O'Keefe was a real estate salesman, and Bob Hope was an automobile mechanic. Joe Penner was a piano salesman and Bob Burns was a plumber's helper. It was an old piece of pipe that he had left over from a job one day that inspired him to invent the bazooka.

ODDS AND ENDS—Bill Cody, Jr., son of the popular western star plays Nelson Eddy as a child in "Girl of the Golden West." . . . Fanny Brice and Constance Collier wandered into an art exhibition and bought fifteen hundred dollars' worth of pictures painted by Darryl Austin, an impoverished WPA worker. The first dollar went for tickets to their last pictures. . . . Grace Moore will replace Laurence Tibbitt as soloist on Andre Kostelanetz' concert of American music March 30. . . . After three years of conducting the orchestra for "Town Hall Tonight," Peter van Steeden still guffaws at Fred Allen's delivery of jokes.

Historic Hoaxes

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON
© Western Newspaper Union.

The Lost Explorer

FROM Ladysmith, Wis., in January, 1923, came a story about an important historical discovery which caused something of a sensation in the Middle West. Two woodsmen, Art Charpin and Walter Latsch, had found in a hollow tree a petrified body which was identified, by the clothing and a piece of paper in one of the pockets, as Pierre D'Artagnan, lost member of the Marquette-Joliet expedition of 1675.

The story, first published in the Rusk County Journal at Ladysmith, was reprinted in many Wisconsin papers, then spread to other parts of the Middle West and finally to all sections of the country. But after two months it was exposed as a hoax.

A bulletin of the Wisconsin Historical society pointed out the many absurdities in the tale—the claim that mineral matter in the sap of the tree had acted as an embalming fluid, that the clothing of the explorer should have been preserved and the piece of paper in his pocket should have been readable after 250 years.

After this expose, M. D. Hinshaw and Edward Richardson, publisher of the Ladysmith paper, who turned out to be the "woodsmen" of the tale, admitted that the yarn had been concocted as a promotion for the newspaper. But they also pointed out what had been obvious to anyone who had read the first story carefully—that, although it was printed in the Rusk County Journal, it was credited to the Rusk County Lyre!

Columbus' Diary

IN 1924 Angel Delmote, a Mexican lawyer, announced that he had obtained from some Jews in Havana, Cuba, an almost priceless historical document. It was the original diary of Christopher Columbus which, enclosed in a wax casing, had been thrown overboard when it appeared certain that his ship was about to be shipwrecked in a storm near the Azores in 1493.

Thereupon, the experts on historical documents laughed long and loud. "So the original log of Columbus has bobbed up again," they said. "Well, it's about time—it comes to light about every two years." They know it's a fake for the very good reason that the diary is written in German and, so far as is known, Columbus could neither speak nor write German. More than that, the language of the "diary" is excellent modern German but resembles that spoken in the Fifteenth century no more than the English language of today resembles the English of Chaucer's time.

A year previously this "diary" had made its appearance in San Francisco. The two men who had bought this "500-year-old document" took it to a paper company to establish its authenticity by chemical tests. The tests were made and proved that the paper on which the "diary" was written was scarcely 30 years old!

What's the answer? Simply that forgers of "historic documents" continue to ply their trade, confident that they can always find a victim to buy their spurious "antiques."

Lieut. Reflippe W. Thenuz

DURING the Spanish-American war Joseph Pulitzer's New York World had reason to believe that Hearst's Journal was stealing its news by rewriting stories which had appeared on its bulletin board or in early editions of the World. So the World laid a trap for the "pirates."

One day it carried a list of Spanish officers reported to have been killed in battle. This list was a long one and the World had paid expensive cable tolls to get it. Included in it was the name of Lieut. Reflippe W. Thenuz. Immediately the Journal came out with the same list of names, including that of Lieut. Thenuz. Then the World printed a story featuring this mythical officer, whose name spelled backward reads "We pilfer the news," and the Journal was caught red-handed.

Similarly, the Jacksonville (Fla.) Star was caught during the Balkan troubles of 1912 when it appeared with a front page story about an airplane battle near a Greek town named Temehmorinets which it had "borrowed" from the Jacksonville Metropolis. The next day the Metropolis announced that the name of this Greek town when spelled backward, was "Stolen from the Met."

Oddest Hall of Fame

Probably the world's oddest hall of fame is in Genoa, Italy. Established some 500 years ago, says Collier's Weekly, it allowed any citizen to elect himself and to determine his "fame" with a gift of money. More than 100,000 lire entitled the donor to a statue in a seated position, between 50,000 and 100,000 lire to one in a standing position, between 25,000 and 50,000 lire to a bust and less than 25,000 to a tablet.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH W. SPEARS

Trim Your Couch Cover in Contrasting Cord

IF SPRING is not in the air yet it soon will be. It is the season when every room in the house seems to need a lift. If your couch or daybed looks as though it has had a hard Winter now is the time to give it a thought.

The couch of the type shown here may be made to fit into almost any decorating scheme if it has a smart and appropriate cover. The one shown here is ideal for a room with modern furniture or for one that follows no particular period. It would also give an interesting accent in a Colonial or provincial room. The cushions match the couch cover. A roughly woven navy blue cotton material is used and the seamlines are outlined with heavy cream colored cable cord. If you would like a gayer color scheme, use red cord with navy blue. Cream or yellow cord with brown material also makes an attractive cover.

A curved candlewick tufting needle such as is shown here at the lower right is good to use for sewing the cord in place. Thread about size 8 or 10 to match the cord should be used.

So often mystifying technical details stand in the way of making things that would add beauty and comfort to your home. It is with this in mind that Mrs. Spears wrote and illustrated her book, SEWING, for the Home Decorator. With clear sketches and text it explains the simplest and most professional methods of making new slipcovers, correctly styled curtains, difficult dressing tables, pleasingly proportioned lamp shades and dozens of other things that will give your rooms new charm and freshness. This book will save you many dollars. Read.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

Pineapple Cream.
8 oz. can crushed pineapple
1/2 pint pastry cream
1/2 cup marmalade, jam or jelly

Drain the juice from the pineapple and save it to use for something else, or just drink it. Whip the cream until stiff. Blend the cream with the drained pineapple and the marmalade, jam or jelly. By varying the kind of jam used the whole tone or flavor of the cream can be changed, and you will find any flavor blends well with the pineapple. Serve the pineapple cream over slices of the chosen cake.

This is a splendid dessert to serve for a bridge party or a nice luncheon as well as for the family.

BEGINNING with this issue this paper is pleased to announce a new series of articles which we believe to be the most original and up to date food department in the country.

We wanted to offer a food department that was live—interesting—different. We wanted to get away from the usual "recipe column." We believe the women of this community are primarily interested in food in its relation to health, in its effect on growing children. Information of this sort has usually been too scientific to be understood by the average person, but in this series it is presented in clear, understandable language and applied so that it will fit the average household.

C. Houston Goudiss, famous author, lecturer, and radio personality, will conduct this department each week. Many housewives will want to make scrapbooks of these articles. Don't miss a single issue.

WHAT TO EAT AND WHY •

Food Provides the Key to Mental and Physical Power

You Can Be Strong, Beautiful, Wise, Rear Healthy Children Only If You Know How to Combine the Right Food Materials in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York.

SINCE the world began, food has been man's first consideration. For it he has fought and died. To find it he has traveled over great continents and braved unknown dangers. His quest for food has changed the map of the world and colored the history of nations. But in all of these historic struggles, he has been motivated solely by the desire to get enough food to satisfy hunger.

Today, actual hunger is rare. But hundreds of thousands of people starve in the midst of plenty because they do not realize the tremendous power of food for good or for evil.

They do not realize that as a man eats, so he is, and that his choice of food materials gives or takes away the power to live vigorously—to think clearly—to feel warmly—to be strong, healthy and wise.

It can be truly said that your food is your fate. It has the power to shape your body—to make it strong and beautiful, or weak and ugly. It has the power to influence your language, your gait, your tone of voice, in short—your life. With the right food, life becomes a glorious adventure, for it increases your leadership, intensifies your magnetic qualities, strengthens your morale, and increases your physical defenses and resistance. Without it, one drags through miserable days—never realizing even half of his potential mental and physical powers.

Food—the Fuel of Life.

The human body is a machine, far more complex than any machine devised by the mind of man. Food is the fuel which runs this amazing machine. Food is also the material used to repair worn-out parts, and to keep the intricate mechanism in good working order.

The body machine cannot be run efficiently without proper food fuel any more than a car could be run without gas, or a house could be heated without oil, coal or wood.

Food also has the power to speed up or slow down the workings of the mind. It likewise influences the state of our nerves, the warmth of our affections, the type of characters we possess.

Finally, the power to have strong, healthy children is based on proper food. And nutritional scientists have discovered that the wrong food can even take away from us the greatest blessing that Nature has bestowed—our earthly immortality. For it can deprive us of the ability to bear children who will carry on after we are gone.

Six Groups of Food Substances.

What food substances are necessary to build and maintain top health—to develop the greatest physical and mental power? There are six groups of food substances which must be included in the balanced diet which promises increased health, happiness and longevity:

1. PROTEINS which build and repair body tissues. These are found in such foods as milk, eggs, meats, fish, cheese and nuts.

2. FATS which yield heat and energy. The fats are represented by butter, cream, oils and the fat of meats.

3. CARBOHYDRATES—the starches and sugars. These also supply heat and energy, and are found chiefly in such foods as bread, potatoes, cereals and sweets.

4. MINERALS which build, repair, protect and regulate. Among the minerals which are absolutely necessary to health and vigor are calcium, phosphorus, iron, copper, iodine, sulphur, manganese, magnesium, sodium and potassium. These are found in varying amounts in milk, eggs, fruits, vegetables, whole grain cereals and meats.

5. VITAMINS which are necessary for body regulation, and as a protection against dread deficiency diseases. Six have been discovered to date—A, B, C, D, E and G.

6. WATER which is a part of all body tissue and must be present in order to have the other food elements function properly.

The ideal dietary is one that includes a correct proportion of the different food elements required to supply bodily needs without any of them being supplied in excess, or in insufficient amounts.

Danger in Omitting One Essential

To illustrate how important it is that not one of the necessary food substances be omitted, let me tell you how an eminent bio-chemist proved in his experimental laboratory, in one of our leading universities, that the difference between stupidity and genius depended upon the presence or absence of one vitamin.

He placed a pregnant animal upon a diet adequate in every respect, except that it lacked one of the six vitamins. As soon as her young were born and weaned, they were fed a completely adequate diet.

Then the scientist tested the mentality of the young animals. He wanted to find out whether or not their mental power had been injured in any way by the fact that their mother—during pregnancy—had been deprived of one vital food element. So he put them in a runway. To get out of this—and reach a tasty morsel at the other end—they had to make their way through a series of passages. He had already made this same test on the same type of animals born of properly fed mothers. He knew that it never took them more than 25 trials to learn their way out of the maze. Most of them had gotten out after 15 to 18 attempts.

But what lack of skill was shown by the animals whose mother had been deprived of proper food! The stupidity of these pathetic little creatures was unbelievable. Some of them never learned to thread the maze and reach their goal, even after as many as 250 trials. They were being given—at the time—everything that was necessary to their diet. But they had entered life with minds totally unequipped to cope with the world—because their mother had not been properly fed before they were born.

This is a striking example of the power of food to make or mar existence. I could cite hundreds of other laboratory experiments, many of which have been confirmed by clinical experience.

Nor is this power of food to affect mental activity confined to prenatal life. Even if a child enters this world with a strong body and a clear mind—the wrong food during childhood has the power to wreck health.

Investigation after investigation, by leading specialists throughout the country, has proven that a surprising percentage of retarded children—those who cannot keep up with their school grades—do not really have inferior minds. They only seem stupid because the action of their minds is clogged and slowed down by sluggish, under-fed bodies.

Physical fitness is a far greater asset than material possessions. For in times of stress and trouble, those who can stand up under the physical strain win the battle. For those who collapse, all is lost.

The Homemaker's Responsibility.

Every wife and mother is therefore faced with the tremendous responsibility of keeping her family mentally and physically fit. Her husband must have the right kind of food in order to earn a living. Her own diet must be adequate and well-balanced if she is to have the energy, wisdom, and patience required of a mother at all hours of the day.

C. Houston Goudiss, outstanding food authority, author, and radio lecturer, author of "What to Eat and Why." He knows food from soil to serving, from table to tissue. Watch for his articles each week.

Her baby will not grow into a healthy man or woman unless he or she has the right nourishment from the moment of birth. And school children can't keep up with their classes without the right food.

If you will follow this series of articles, and put into practice the principles of correct eating that I advocate, I can promise that you will increase both mental and physical efficiency, and as a result, achieve greater health and happiness for every member of your family.

Food Affects Your Body and Mind

Each morning when you awake, a new life is ahead of you. Whether that day and the days to follow will be better or worse than those that went before, depends largely upon what you eat.

Within a few hours the bread, meat, vegetables and liquids that you swallow are transformed into your personality. They begin to think, feel and act. They become YOU. What was food yesterday, today is carrying on the important business of the world.

Each meal that you eat helps or hinders the efficiency and ease with which these various duties are performed. That is why it is true that as you eat, so you are. And that is why I say that three times a day, at your table, you SIT DOWN TO LIFE.

How Often Should Your Furniture Be Polished?

Housewives differ on the question of "when to polish their furniture." Some have no set time for it—polishing when they think of it—or when, casting a glance about, they decide that the furniture can "stand it." Others, polish every cleaning day—which ordinarily occurs once a week. Others dedicate but one day a year to this important procedure. And still others, polish the furniture in their home regularly, once a month. This last group is the largest—but their schedule is not sufficiently frequent. Furniture can not be polished too often! True, the outward benefit of the best oil polish—the luster—will last through a single week—and more—but this same polish, with its light oil base, preserves and "feeds" the furniture, revives it, prolongs its life! So that every application is highly beneficial to woodwork and the various pieces of fine wood in the home. Our advice, therefore, for the sake of endurance, as well as appearance, of your furniture, is "polish up" with a good oil polish at least twice a month!

NOTICE TO BIDDERS Construction of Drainage Improvement

Notice is hereby given that the board of supervisors of Hancock County, Iowa, will be in session at the court house at Garner, Iowa, on the 28th day of March, 1938, at 11:00 A. M. for the purpose of receiving bids for the construction of drainage improvement, known and designated as Drainage District Number 71 Hancock County, Iowa.

Said work to be let in one section, known as Section One.

The time fixed for commencement and completion of the contract shall be as follows: Work must be commenced on or before the 15th day of April, 1938, and completed on or before the 1st day of July, 1938.

Bids will be received on the following items:

Main No. 2 of Drainage District No. 71

Length Size Av. Depth Max Depth
1700' 24" 77 88
Connecting tile with bulkhead.
Repairing manhole at Station No. 17, Connecting farm tile, Haul from Goodell 8 miles.

All private tile connections to be made with cemented junctions at price bid for tile connections.

Bids will be received for material alone, for labor alone or for complete labor and material. Bids for material shall include the tile delivered along the line of the ditch as ordered by the Engineer. Bids for labor shall include digging the ditch, laying the tile, backfilling the trench, both material and labor for manhole repairs and tile connections.

All tile to be delivered at the ditch side subject to inspection at this point and to be delivered as ordered by the construction engineer.

All ditches and drains to be constructed in all respects in accordance with the plat, profiles and specifications on file in the auditor's office at Garner, Iowa, subject only to such changes and alterations as may be made as provided by law.

Sealed bids will be received at the office of the auditor of Hancock County, Iowa, up to 11:00 A. M. on the day of the letting.

Each bid must be accompanied by a cash deposit or by a certified check in a sum equal to 10 per cent of the total amount of the bid as a guarantee of good faith of the bidder.

The board will at their discretion, let the work to the lowest responsible bidder, reserving however, the right to reject any or all bids and also reserving the right to adjourn the time of awarding the contract.

ALL BIDS NOT MADE IN CONFORMANCE WITH THE ABOVE REQUIREMENTS WILL BE REJECTED.

The party to whom any contract is being awarded will be required to attend at the office of the auditor of Hancock County, Iowa within ten days after such award and execute a contract; thereby agreeing to all provisions, terms and conditions thereof and shall file with the county auditor a bond, subject to his approval for a sum equal to seventy-five per cent of the amount of the bid, such bond to be procured from a resident agent, and in case the party to whom any work is awarded fails to enter into this contract and furnish bond within ten days as herein required, the deposit of such party shall thereupon become forfeited to Drainage District No. 71 Hancock County, Iowa together with all rights under said award.

The deposits of unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them within twenty-four hours after demand, and the deposit of the successful bidder will be returned to him upon his executing the contract and filing with the county auditor the bond as herein required.

In making the award the facilities, reputation and responsibility of the bidder will be given due weight.

By virtue of statutory authority a preference will be given to materials, products, supplies, provisions and all other articles produced, manufactured, made or grown within the state of Iowa.

Published by order of the Board of Supervisors of Hancock County Iowa.

Dated at Garner, Iowa, this 8th day of March 1938

Severe Storm Flattens Buildings In North Iowa

MONDAY NIGHT'S STORM DOES DAMAGE TO FARM BUILDINGS

A heavy wind, rain and hail storm struck north Iowa at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, causing considerable damage to farms.

At the Blickenderfer farm 11 miles east of Klemme it was reported that a barn and other buildings were demolished and the porch blown off the house.

At the Verner Nelson farm southeast of Klemme, large trees were up-rooted, a hog house twisted out of line and machinery blown over in the yard.

A transformer near the William Hermann farm north of town short circuited and burned up.

About the only damage reported at Klemme was a few windows broken out by the hail and wind.

FIRST DAY OF SPRING STEALS A MARCH ON MID-SUMMER

Monday, March 21st was the first day of spring according to the calendar, but according to the thermometer in North Iowa, it was an ideal June day. High readings throughout the state hit the 80 degree mark and Des Moines registered a high of 86, a record for the first day of spring that had not been equalled since 1907.

The "heat-wave" took a sudden tumble, however, when wind, hail and rain struck over the state during the night, sending the thermometer readings down to 40 degrees.

GIRL SCOUT NEWS

The Girl Scouts met at the home of Gertrude Grosshuesch, March 21. We started the meeting with an observation game called "Look, See." We began our nature study again. Two patrols will study Geography and one will study Astronomy. Mrs. Schaeffer brought some numerals and we looked at them. We also talked about the sun and other heavenly bodies.

Where Authority Belongs

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Within recent weeks there have been encouraging indications at Washington of a readiness to heed the needs and the purposes of the people themselves, rather than the demands of bureaucrats and theorists.

Certain members of Congress have urged a more reasonable exercise of the taxing power, to restore a lagging confidence. Others have reminded colleagues that their responsibilities to the constituents who elected them should outweigh loyalties to political office-holders.

In many ways the trend appears to be swinging from a policy of recklessness and haphazard economic experiments, toward one of encouragement of production and recovery.

Americans will hope that such members of Congress continue their efforts in behalf of the nation and its citizens. For they realize that it was the American worker and producer, with his eyes on the American scene—not the theorist, with his eyes on Europe—who built our nation into greatness.

They realize that the American insistence on the right of every man to enjoy a high standard of living, to exercise full freedom of religion and of speech, and to look forward to improving his work and his condition was established, not by political and economic theorists, but by the workers and citizens themselves.

As a result of their power and their labors, America achieved a record of progress and of well-being for all its people, unique in history. Bureaucratic ideas, borrowed from overseas, have hindered rather than helped such progress.

The efforts of those representatives at Washington who are striving to restore authority to the people merit support and encouragement.

Under our American form of government, that's where authority belongs.

SURPRISE PARTY HELD ON ALFRED JOSTEN, SUNDAY

Alfred Josten was really surprised Sunday when at about the noon hour a steady stream of cars arrived at his home northeast of Klemme. It was then that Alfred caught the idea that he was being surprised on his birthday. Relatives and friends brought well filled baskets of good things to eat and a big dinner was enjoyed.

Those present besides Alfred and son Duane, were Mr. and Mrs. Peter Josten; Herman Back and family; Mr. and Mrs. Nels Back and daughter, Marceile; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson and daughter, Phyllis; Mr. and Mrs. Nels Peterson; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Smith and daughter, Joyce; Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Daly and son, Billy; Chris Back and family; Lyndon Kilgore and Leo Jass.

What We May Learn From the Eclipse of the Moon! One of the many interesting features in THE AMERICAN WEEKLY, the magazine distributed with NEXT SUNDAY'S CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER.

HELLO, FOLKS!

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Milvern Lau at Reinbeck, Iowa, on March 14th. The new son has been named Larry Dean. The Lau's also have a little girl.

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Lauen Sunday night. The Lauens live southeast of Klemme.

A baby daughter was born to Mr. and Mrs. Dale Schriener at Hibbing, Minnesota, on March 22nd. And that accounts for the broad smiles on "Grandpa" and "Grandma" Elmer Schneider's genial faces. "Uncle" Bob is doing a lot of strutting around, too.

ELAINE BUNTENBACH WON HIGHEST RANKING WITH TROMBONE SOLO

Other Entries Won Excellent Rankings At Belmond

The music department of the Klemme High School, under the direction of Martin K. Elstad, won recognition at the sub-district music contest held at Belmond last week end.

Solo Given "Superior"

The highest ranking given the Klemme School was won by Elaine Buntentbach, who played a trombone solo and was awarded a "superior."

The high school orchestra received a grade of "excellent," which is the second highest rating.

Jacqueline Kudje, who entered the contest with a violin solo, won an "excellent."

A stringed instrument group, composed of Jacqueline Kudje, Doris Johnson, Irene Spittler and Patricia Kudje, accompanied on the piano by Irene Becker, won an "excellent" rating.

The Klemme High School band also won an "excellent" rating. A few other groups and solo numbers were also entered but did not quite come up to the degree of perfection to receive the upper ratings.

HIGH SCHOOL MUSICIANS TO GIVE PROGRAM

Under the direction of Martin Elstad, the high school music department will make its first formal appearance the evening of April 8, 1938. The program will be a full evening of music. The band will give a concert and the Girls' Glee Club and several soloists will appear also.

As a whole, the music department of the Klemme-School made a very good showing at the contest.

IOWA FARMERS USE 450,000 TONS OF LIMESTONE IN 1937

Iowa farmers applied nearly 450,000 tons of lime in 74 Iowa counties last year, reports W. F. Watkins, extension soil conservationist at Iowa State College, who has just completed a summary of county agent "soil conservation practice reports."

"Ninety-one counties in all used lime but not all agents reported actual acreage figures," Watkins explained. "If complete figures were available, the total might be nearer 500,000 tons."

Soil acidity tests were made for 432,373 acres of land in 83 counties, the reports showed.

Other figures brought out in the reports:

Sixty-four counties reported use of gully control methods: 25, strip cropping; 3, terracing; 28, contour tillage, and 59, grassed waterways.

Eighty counties reported using recommended crop rotation, 69 reporting crop rotation to maintain and conserve soil on 2,442,360 acres.

Correction

The Times last week reported that N. G. Moberly was a patient at a nearby hospital. The report was false and we are glad to state that Mr. Moberly is in fine health. Evidently the name was misunderstood when telephoned in to this office.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—From this seat in the grandstand the view is quite clear that New Deal leaders are going out in this summer's primaries to nominate New Dealers against the conservative old line Democrats. I have looked into the local situation in a number of states and congressional districts and everywhere the line of cleavage is showing. And these things are happening notwithstanding the declarations of Postmaster General-National Committee Chairman Farley that there will be no interference.

It is not the purpose here to report on every one of the states or districts where the battle is impending between New Dealers and old line Democrats. I shall attempt, however, to outline a few of them to establish what is going on and how the New Dealers are maneuvering to get a better grip on Democratic party machinery.

To do this clearly, it seems to me it ought to be recalled how President Roosevelt and numerous of his spokesmen have threatened those Democrats who have disagreed with New Deal policies in any serious way. The fight over the President's plan to rebuild the Supreme court of the United States caused a serious split in the President's support and it was immediately thereafter that threats were forthcoming about those who had refused to go along on the court reorganization. About the time that fight was in its most bitter stage, it will be remembered, Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania made a radio speech in which he attempted to kick certain Democrats out of the party. The White House denied any connection with that speech, but there were few who believed Senator Guffey was acting on his own initiative. That is to say, it appeared to be a New Deal policy, for the Pennsylvania Democrat often has served as the mouthpiece in that way.

There was comparative quiet for awhile, but those with ears to the ground noted many minor rumblings that, to the political wise, could mean only one thing. Those rumblings presaged another earthquake. They are increasing in intensity, too. We hear them from many directions.

Young James Roosevelt, son and secretary of the President who is just now serving on a tour of duty as a lieutenant colonel in the marine corps, was in Florida last month. While there he took occasion to say publicly that Sen. Claude Pepper, a New Dealer, ought to be renominated and re-elected. Well, Senator Pepper is such an ardent New Dealer that he once said if anyone wanted to know his position all that was needed was to ascertain Mr. Roosevelt's views—because he would support the President on any question.

I am told from sources that I believe have an understanding of the Florida situation that young Mr. Roosevelt's endorsement may be the deciding factor in a close race. That is to say, the race was so tight between Senator Pepper and the able young Rep. Mark Wilcox that one guess was as good as another. Now, however, Representative Wilcox is asking the voters whether they shall determine who their senator shall be or whether they shall be told by the White House. It is said that broad resentment already has been created; so much resentment, indeed, that recently Mr. Wilcox made the statement that no campaign would be necessary on his behalf if only "Sistie" and "Buzzie" Dall, grandchildren of President Roosevelt, would give Senator Pepper their endorsement.

Over in Pennsylvania another kind of a situation has bobbed up.

Pennsylvania Situation

In that state, the bosses have had trouble agreeing on their candidates, and finally they took their troubles to the White House. (I mean the Democratic bosses which have supplanted the Republican bosses who used to rule Pennsylvania.) The result of the White House confab was that Governor Earle will run for Democratic nomination to the senate so he will be alongside another New Dealer, Senator Guffey, and Charles A. Jones, Pittsburgh attorney, was picked as the nominee for governor. These selections were made by the state committee, which is controlled, of course, by New Dealers, and therefore those are about the only names of importance that will be voted on in the statewide primary. But the significance of these things is not so apparent until it is known that two or three important Democrats in Pennsylvania have withdrawn and have "retired from politics" as a result of the situation.

Now, in Indiana, there is still another picture. It is probably the most interesting of any now taking shape. In the Hoosier state, we are started off with an announcement from the steps of the White House by Governor Townsend that "Van Nuys must go." He referred to the Democratic Senator Van Nuys who had the temerity to oppose the President's court packing bill and who generally is regarded as much more of a Democrat than his colleague, Senator Minton, who remains inside the New Deal fence always.

The Indiana picture is further complicated by the smoke rings Paul McNutt is blowing around. Mr. McNutt, a former governor of the state and now high commissioner to the Philippine commonwealth, is running for the New Deal nomination for the Presidency like the well-known jackrabbit. He says, however, that he is not a candidate for anything. It is a statement that is hard to believe because the McNutt airplane flight from the remote islands, the speeches across the United States, the free food-free drink—free publicity party given for Mr. McNutt at an outstanding Washington hotel—all combine to spell the launching of a political boom of some kind. So, in Indiana, the Democratic state committee soon will be setting up a slate of its choice—and that choice will be satisfactory to the President. It means that these will be New Dealers. That is apparent because of the death sentence already pronounced for Senator Van Nuys. Of course, Mr. Van Nuys isn't licked yet, but that is the picture.

Then, the Indiana situation is, or ought to be, of great interest to the Republicans. I am told that if the Democratic committee, controlled as it is, should ditch Senator Van Nuys, he may decide to run as an independent candidate for re-election. He probably would not get anywhere in a machine controlled state like Indiana, but he might draw enough away from the Democratic vote to enable a Republican to win.

Now, out in Indiana there is a right up-and-coming young fighter on the Republican team. He is Rep. Charles Halleck. By virtue of the fact that he is lone Republican congressman from Hoosier territory, Mr. Halleck is in a splendid position to set off some fireworks. Mr. Halleck is highly regarded by Democrats and Republicans in the house. He is young, vigorous and keen. Furthermore, Mr. Halleck is neither a conservative nor a radical, and we are hearing more and more of a swing in the country that probably will land our political policies in the middle of the road, instead of on the wild-eyed programs of most New Dealers or the moss-backed, policies of hide-bound Republicans of yesteryear.

As I see the picture in Indiana, therefore, it is not impossible to conjure up a situation in which the New Deal attempt to drive Senator Van Nuys from politics would backfire to the extent of electing a Republican senator.

Kentucky also provides a battleground. In that state, I think New Dealers made a great mistake and it may eventuate that the mistake will cost them dearly. Senator Barkley, the Roosevelt spokesman in the senate, is going to have to fight his hardest to win renomination over Gov. "Happy" Chandler. Kentuckians here who know the politics of their home state tell me that the governor is a real challenger and that he is a campaigner of genuine ability.

Concerning the New Deal mistake: it will be remembered when Mr. Roosevelt interfered in senate affairs by indicating his choice for the leadership upon the death of the great Senator Robinson of Arkansas. That was the occasion when the President wrote to Senator Barkley, addressing him as "Dear Alben," and thereby attached a title that has proved such a source of levity. When it became apparent that Mr. Barkley would meet opposition, the New Deal promoted a testimonial dinner for the senator and sent numerous New Deal wheel-horses to Louisville to attend. Among them was Marvin McIntyre, assistant secretary to the President. Well, the Chandler folks built up a testimonial luncheon for the governor on the same day. Although Mr. McIntyre reached Louisville in time, he "just could not make it" to get to the Chandler luncheon. So that was that, and hundreds of Kentuckians at once decided that the New Deal was going to have Mr. Barkley and that made them say to themselves that they would choose their senator. It is of such incidents that political victories and political defeats are made.

Another battleground yet to be mentioned is Iowa. Senator Gillette was among those who did not like the President's court reorganization scheme, and said so. From there on, he has been a marked man. He will have to fight for renomination, therefore, against a New Dealer—rather, an opponent of New Deal selection. Representative Wearin has announced that he will be a candidate for the Democratic nomination.

Lesson for March 27

CORRECTING WRONG IDEAS OF RELIGION

LESSON TEXT—Mark 7:1-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—This people honoreth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me.
PRIMARY TOPIC—At Dinner-Time.
JUNIOR TOPIC—What Is Real Religion?
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Counts with God?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Sidestepping Responsibilities.

The never-ending struggle of Christianity is to keep the simple gospel of the grace of God in Christ Jesus free to operate in all its glory and power, unencumbered by the traditions and formulas of men. It has been my privilege to read a recent book by a brilliant young man who, while serving as a professor of philosophy in a large university, is also versed in the related fields of theology, psychology, psychiatry, and psychotherapy. He has had first-hand experience in dealing with the problems of men and women. With this background of both study and experience he gives it as his absolute conviction that we must get "back to the original simplicity of the Christian gospel." He suggests that we need to "dust off the additions and superstructures" that have been added since Christ came to seek and to save the lost.

Our lesson for today finds Jesus meeting that very issue with the traditionalists of His day.

I. Washed Hands and Unwashed Hearts (vv. 1-6).

In the process of interpreting the law of Moses and applying it to the affairs of daily life the religious authorities of Israel had developed a mass of intricate and onerous rules which had literally buried the law itself and had substituted ritualistic formalism for spiritual life. So fond had the scribes and the Pharisees become of these traditions that they became bold enough to declare that they were far superior to the law itself.

Their attack on Jesus because His disciples ate with unwashed hands did not refer to the proper cleansing of one's hands before eating, but to the ceremonial washings which were said to be necessary if one had accidentally touched a Gentile, or something that a Gentile had touched in the market place.

Jesus skillfully and finally disposes of that question by reminding the objectors that they were serving God with their lips only, but their hearts were far from Him. Washed hands are not a thing to be condemned, and Jesus says nothing about that point. When the washing of hands becomes of more importance than the cleansing of the heart, however, the soul is in real danger.

II. Traditions of Man Versus the Commandment of God (vv. 7-13).

Here is the heart of the entire matter, for while we may not always be aware of it the fact is that our anxiety to maintain human tradition which is contrary to the law and Spirit of God is fundamentally for the purpose of evading our full and true responsibility.

The Jew who was so avaricious that he did not wish to support his aged and needy parents could entirely evade that God-given responsibility by declaring that his property was "Corban," dedicated to God. Thereafter no matter how great was the need of his parents they could receive nothing. The execution of this oath was carried out to such a fine point that a son who had declared his property to be "Corban" could visit a sick father or mother for only a brief period lest he might stay long enough to perform some duties of a nurse and so contribute to his parents by saving them some expense.

Thus do men even in our day make "the word of God of none effect" (v. 13), through their traditions. No right minded person objects to the worthy traditions of worship and service which are such a precious heritage of the Christian church. Rightfully apprehended and properly used they are both desirable and helpful. But we must never permit the grace and power of God in Jesus Christ "to be brought under the trammels of human teachers or the arrangements of human office-bearers. The first movement toward the mastery of the soul by tradition is the movement of that soul away from immediate, direct, first-hand fellowship with God" (Morgan).

The crying need of our day, as it was of the time when Jesus was on earth, is that we should clear away hindering encumbrances.

Goodness

The general goodness which is nourished in noble hearts, makes every one think that strength of virtue to be in another whereof they find assured foundation in themselves.—Sir P. Sidney.

Simplicity of Religion

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.—James 1:27.

STAR DUST Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

THE millions who have read and loved "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" will rejoice that it has been brought to the screen almost intact. A few memorable scenes of the classic of boyhood had to be skipped, but the important ones are all there, the whitewashing of the fence, Muff Potter under suspicion of murder, Tom's startling appearance at his own funeral.

Filmed in Technicolor, the tones are subdued and pleasant, making the town and all its inhabitants of some sixty years ago look entirely natural.

There was a great to-do a year or so ago over David Selznick's country-wide search for just the right boy to play Tom. Finally, Tommy Kelly, son of a WPA worker, was found in New York. Everyone who sees the picture will surely be glad that Selznick passed up the precocious actors of Hollywood and waited until he found Tommy. For Tommy Kelly fits perfectly the character of Tom Sawyer.

All Hollywood is talking about the great change in Katharine Hepburn. The roustabout comedy that she indulges in for her new picture, "Bringing Up Baby," has affected her manner in private life. No longer is she aloof and haughty. No longer does she scurry away as if frightened, or very bored, when co-workers approach.

Lawrence Tibbett will come back to the screen if Warner Brothers have anything to say about it. They want him for "The Desert Song" and he will have time to make a picture soon, for Grace Moore is going to replace him on his radio hour.

Joan Crawford was quite startled recently when she heard an early-morning news broadcast announcing that she had left her husband, Franchot Tone, and would soon institute divorce proceedings. She glanced across the breakfast table, and there was Franchot as usual. "Never mind, honey," he counselled, "they have been trying to separate us for three years, and I don't believe they can do it ever."

Hollywood casting directors deserve a vote of thanks. They have put back to work three popular actresses who have been playing hooky from the screen too long. Zasu Pitts was dragged out of her kitchen, where she has been busily writing a cookbook, to play opposite Victor Moore in "Strictly Accidental" for R. K. O. Joan Bennett, just returned from a stage tour and very happy to be settling down in her new house in Beverly Hills, was persuaded to go to Texas to film "The Texan" with Randolph Scott and several hundred long-horned cattle in support. And Claire Trevor, so well liked in her radio serial with Edward G. Robinson, was cast opposite him in a Warner Brothers picture.

ODDS AND ENDS—"Bad Man of Brimstone" revived Wallace Beery's career which has been under a cloud of so-so pictures lately. He will follow that up with a sequel "Bad Man From Arizona" . . . Peter Van Steeden received congratulatory telegrams from several New York university professors on the fourteenth anniversary of his radio debut. It seems that in 1924 they excused him from his classes one day so he could audition for a radio program. He has been on the air ever since . . . Martha Tilton who sings with Benny Goodman's Tuesday night swing school did the song numbers that Joyce Compton appeared to be singing in the film "The Awful Truth" . . . When you see the "Goldwyn Follies" you may think that Andrea Leeds is singing, but your old friend Virginia Verrill of the radio really recorded those song numbers.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of ready approval. MEDECINE AS A CAREER
Wednesday morning Dr. Dulmes gave a talk on "Medicine as a Career." It is necessary in this work to spend a great deal of time in preparation. First you need at least two years in college on pre-medical work, then four years in a medical school, and a year as an interne in some hospital. In the large cities the field of doctors is overcrowded but in many small towns there are openings. If one likes the work, it is a good profession, but Dr. Dulmes advised anyone who thought of making that his life's work to wait a few years before entering college so as to be sure it's your choice. There is too much money needed for training to spend it in vain.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2
We have two new children in our room. Daryl Ostercamp is in first grade and Betty Ostercamp is in second.

We made picture books for these children who are sick: Iris Rosendahl, Isabelle Gibbs and Richard and Delores Kaduce.

GRADES 3 AND 4
Peggy Coobs, Phyllis Christiance, Roger Ridder, Roger Bock, Esther Tiggeman, Dean Jacobs, Velma Tiggeman, Ruth Bell and Mavis Meyer received perfect scores in spelling Friday.

We listened to another radio program Thursday. The program we heard was about the little country of Lithuania. We also enjoyed the story that was told in the story period.

Friday was Elizabeth Goll's birthday. We played games in the room to help her celebrate. We all enjoyed her treat of candy bars.

GRADES 5 AND 6
Barbara Johnson and Robert Tiggeman—reporters

We listened to the radio Wednesday in the 7th and 8th grade room. It was interesting to go with the Hamilton family to visit Maracabo and the Venezuelan Oil Fields.

We are making a scrap book for Eunice as her brother has scarlet fever and she can't come to school.

We are pasting jokes and funny pictures in it.

The sixth grade has finished the study of Germany. We have been watching the newspapers for all the news about Hitler.

The fifth graders are studying Samuel Clemens, known as Mark Twain. They were surprised to learn how he got his nickname.

The new health captains that we elected last week, Edward and Barbara, have made kites for their racers.

GRADES 7 AND 8

Ellen Kilgore and Freda Kaduce have been absent this week. Ellen is ill and Freda is quarantined with her sister who has scarlet fever.

We published the first issue of our paper which we call "The Junior Times." Members of Miss Brakel's typing I class cut the stencils and ran off the copies for us.

Almost all of our wooden covers have been finished this week.

Want To Borrow Meteor

In 1879 a huge meteor fell near Estherville which scientists came from afar to view. The University of Minnesota came into possession of part of it and the remainder was sold to European museums. So far as is known no larger piece is left in Iowa, but just recently an Estherville committee called on Minnesota university officials and asked for a loan of a slab of the meteor to display locally for historical and educational purposes. It was thought the request would be granted.

Tear Gas Hurt Eyes
According to University of Iowa physicians, it may take a year to determine whether the sight of Donald Morrison, Olwein young man, can be saved. Eichendorf at West Union freed the man, noting in his entry that the defendant was in bad shape.

WHO'S GOT THESE $1,000 BILLS?

The country may be still suffering from the old depression or the new "recession" but the number of $1,000 bills in circulation wouldn't indicate it. Last year, according to a United States Treasury report, there was $288,000,000 in $1,000 bills in circulation, or one such bill for every 450 persons, men, women and children, in our population. The increase in such bills in 1937 over 1936 was $23,000,000, but we still have our first one to own, or even see, says an exchange.

THE FLEET'S ON GUARD!

Uncle Sam's 'Battlewagons' Leave West Coast Bases For Greatest Maneuvers in Nation's History With Hawaii Serving as Focal Point

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Its movements shrouded with secrecy, the strongest battle fleet the United States has ever seen is sailing from home bases at San Pedro and San Diego this month to compete in the most intensive and strenuous naval maneuvers in the nation's history.

This will be no child's play under a warm tropical sun. Instead the battle chiefs are sending their iron-clad monsters as far north as the Aleutian islands that "drip" off the frigid west coast of Alaska. Here some ships will work under the most unfavorable wartime conditions possible. Meanwhile others will "fight" as far as 1,500 miles below Honolulu.

Announced last December when America was worrying strenuously over Japan's aggressive attitude, the maneuvers may well be considered a stage show for Nippon's benefit, though official Washington has denied it. And—intentional or otherwise—the war games will focus national attention on the navy just when congress is considering President Roosevelt's recent armament appropriations bill.

The casual layman witnessing this display of maritime power will probably be moved to stick out his chest with pride. Not so the navy's commanders, however, who will probably view the results of the war games as very tangible evidence that America needs more battleships. With other nations developing long range cruisers and airplanes, the vast Pacific becomes more difficult to defend. Fewer refueling islands are needed by an approaching enemy; they can take a long "end run" around Hawaii and unless America's first line of defense is close at hand, there's apt to be trouble.

Almost 175 men of war, about 500 planes and 50,000 to 60,000 men are cific, piling even higher the evidence that Hawaii is tremendously important in protecting our west coast. Without it, our first line of defense would be the mainland—California, Oregon and Washington. If foreign nations have strengthened their position in the Pacific with long-range cruisers and planes, America is helping its position by developing several strategic islands as refueling points and refuges for bombers. These include such barren spots as remote Howland island, 1,500 miles southwest of Hawaii. Recently a navy bomber flew this distance and return. The feat attracted little attention, yet it was tremendously important.

A few years ago, the flight range of army and navy planes was 150 miles. That is, a plane could carry only sufficient fuel to fly out from its base 150 miles and return. Therefore aviation patrols were limited to circles of 140 miles around Hawaii, the Panama canal, Alaska and the west coast of the mainland. The owns Palmyra island in that vicinity, which has a quiet lagoon suitable for seaplane landings. Kiska in the Aleutians is one of the six American ports closed to foreign shipping and over which no civilian aircraft is permitted to fly without approval by the government.

Meanwhile, the military establishment in Hawaii hasn't been neglected. It has become the most important defense center of the nation. It is estimated that approximately $100,000,000 has been spent on fortifications alone. More troops are concentrated there than in any other section of the nation. The world's greatest military airport, Hickam field, is under construction on the outskirts of Honolulu.

Many a world power is now angry with itself for not having annexed more of the several hundred small islands that dot the Pacific, and which are now looming more important for naval purposes. Today for the first time it is apparent that the nations which control the islands are those which control the Pacific itself.

Japan's Pacific Power.

France, Portugal, Germany and The Netherlands have disappeared as strong contenders for Pacific power. The last to leave was Germany, and its place was taken by Japan which was given most German possessions under mandate at the treaty of Versailles. Under this mandate Japan took virtual possession of a strip of the Pacific 2,500 miles long from east to west and 1,200 miles wide. She acquired 623 islands, including the Marianas group (with the exception of Guam); the Marshall islands; the Caroline islands; and the Palau islands.

Since Japan is probably the only nation from which the United States has anything to fear in the Pacific, the Versailles mandate now looms highly important. Japan can establish naval bases almost halfway across the ocean from her home shores and within 2,500 miles of Hawaii, within easy striking distance. But she has not yet established these bases, and Uncle Sam has made his Hawaiian islands so impregnable as to discourage the most optimistic would-be attacker. Which once again emphasizes the islands' importance, since an enemy from the west would almost have to gain possession of Hawaii before attacking the United States.

Oahu, the island on which Honolulu is located, is circled by a coast railway on which guns can be moved quickly to stave off any attack. Latest anti-aircraft weapons are ready for the enemy, including huge horns capable of picking up the sound of aircraft miles away. This sound is transferred to 800,000,000 candle-power searchlights. Once the enemy plane is bathed in light, range-finding devices automatically aim the guns on the target.

Indeed, Hawaii has become the Malta of the Pacific.

U. S. Joins the Race.

Talk of guns and battleships and fleet maneuvers may sound strange to American ears today, and more than one slow-awakening individual will wonder why all this bustle about defending the Pacific. But in Washington, where congress is building a program that will give the United States a navy "second to none," the matter is of vital importance. Actually our navy is not in the best of shape, and we are entering the rearmament race five years behind the leaders.

The impossibility of America's continued abstinence from this military program is a growing conviction with more Americans every day, though a peace-loving nation may rebel at the thought of building for war.

As we turn our eyes west to the sinking sun, though, we'll be assured that no trouble will come from that direction before dawn again lifts the Pacific's night shroud. The fleet's on guard!

WHAT TO EAT AND WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses PROTEINS— The Foods That You Cannot Live Without Eminent Food Authority Explains Why No Protein Means No Life—Describes the Kind and Amount Required for the Best Growth in Children—Good Resistance, Vigor and Endurance in Adults.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th St., New York.

FOOD is—and always has been—the central problem of life. But only in recent years has its true power been revealed, as a result of scientific investigation.

Fortunately, we now know what constitutes sound nutrition, and it is possible for every homemaker to plan meals that will enable her family to eat their way to health.

Topping the list of food essentials are the proteins. The Dutch chemist, Mulder, who hit upon this name, made a wise choice, for it means "to take first place."

And certainly the proteins are first in importance. For they are the stuff of which our bodies are built. Without them, there would be no life.

Every man, woman and child has a fundamental need for protein, because it is an essential component of every living cell and makes up a large part of the solids of a muscle cell. Evidently, a great many of the glandular principles and substances, which control the functions of the body, are also protein in character.

Protein is the only food element that contains nitrogen, and next to water, nitrogen is the chief constituent of the human body.

Protein Builds Bodies.

A new born baby weighs, on an average, from 7 to 7½ pounds, and the adult into which it grows may weigh 20 to 30 times as much. The vast amount of tissue necessary to construct a man is built chiefly from protein.

Once the adult body is built, however, protein is not required for the growth of new tissues, except under certain conditions, such as during pregnancy, when one is recovering from a wasting illness, or when an athlete is in training and the muscles are increasing in size.

Keeps the Body in Repair.

There is, however, a maintenance requirement for protein which continues throughout life, and which applies to both children and adults. For the body may be compared to a machine, on which it is necessary to make allowance for the wear and tear of parts. Protein is the only substance that will rebuild the millions of cells which each day cease to function.

Thus, we see that protein performs two vital services—First, it builds new tissues; second, it repairs worn-out tissues.

The Building Stones of the Body. Protein is found in many different foods, but unfortunately, not all proteins are equally valuable.

Proteins Vary in Value.

Some build new tissue; others will not build tissue, but are capable of repairing worn-out cells. It is absolutely essential that the homemaker, charged with the responsibility of feeding a family, should be able to distinguish between those types of protein which are adequate for both growth and repair, and those that are only useful for maintenance.

For if the diet does not contain an adequate amount, or the right kind of protein, our bodies will be badly built and they will be improperly repaired and cannot wear well. As Dr. Eugene V. McCollum of Johns Hopkins university, the world-famous investigator and discoverer of vitamin A, puts it: "Unless the right kinds, with respect to the size and shape, are furnished by the food proteins, the exact pattern on which the muscle must be constructed cannot be formed and, in this case, growth is interfered with."

If you were building a house you would consider nothing less than the finest materials. You would know that cheap lumber and poorly made bricks could not produce a lasting building. In the same way, you must learn to discriminate between the various types of protein used for the supremely important purpose of building your children's bodies, or keeping adult physiques in perfect repair.

Some foods cost more than others and you should not be guilty of spending hard-earned money for expensive protein foods when the same amount of nourishment could be more economically obtained from an inexpensive source.

Proteins that will build new tissue, as well as replace worn-out cells, are known as complete proteins. In this class we have meats, fish, cheese, milk, eggs and some nuts.

Incomplete proteins are found in grains and products made from them, and in the legumes—that is, peas, beans, lentils and peanuts.

The proteins of these foods are of high nutritive value, however, and when supplemented with other proteins, such as those of milk, will meet every bodily requirement.

How Much Protein?

The protein requirement varies according to size, age, and the kind of protein foods consumed.

To allow for growth, children require twice as much protein per pound of body weight as adults. That is to say, an adult requires daily one-thirtieth of an ounce for each pound of body weight, but a child needs one-fiftieth of an ounce for each pound of body weight.

The amount of protein food should usually constitute from 10 to 15 per cent of all the calories taken. If this plan is faithfully followed, there will be more than enough to take care of every requirement.

Eskimos eat two or three times as much protein as most dwellers in the temperate zone, but that is because other foods are scarce. In the tropics, on the other hand, the consumption of protein is often not more than half that of the temperate zone.

An Adequate Protein Ration.

Milk and eggs are among the finest forms of protein, and they should have an especially important part in the diet, not only of the growing child but of invalids, prospective mothers, and the mother who is nursing a baby. If the choice must be between milk and eggs, milk should have first place because it is usually cheaper in proportion to the food value it supplies.

In planning the family dietary, a safe rule to keep in mind is to include in the daily diet: a quart of milk for every child, a pint for each adult; one egg, one serving of meat, fish or chicken, one serving of another protein food such as cheese, dried peas or beans. You can achieve wide and still provide an adequate ration within the limits of this rule. For milk may be as a beverage, in soups, puddings and as cream sauce. Eggs likewise be varied in their of preparation, or conceals other foods. There are meats, and the number of which fresh, canned, dried fish can be served is Both cheese and nuts sandwiches, salads and dressings as well as many courses. Peas, beans and lentils can as soup, mock roast or crock. Grain products, which include macaroni and bread, appear in any course in the

In planning menus, always fore you the ideal that an amount of first class protein first class man, whereas an amount may lead to stunted functional nervous diseases, efficiency and the earlier age.

In choosing proteins for your family—remember the take first place among food that upon their wise choice your future welfare, your—your life!

Difficult Problems Confront Aviation in the Stratosphere

St. Petersburg, Fla.—Painting a picture of knotty problems still to be solved and of unknown factors still to be encountered and tested, R. C. Zinn of Pan-American Airways finds five chief obstacles that must be hurdled before commercial stratosphere aviation is realized.

The problems presented by the impracticability of short flights, decrease in pay load, increased cost of flying equipment, higher maintenance costs and deficiency in engineering progress must be worked out, he declares in a bulletin published here by the Florida Engineering society.

Conditioning the weather inside the plane will be more a matter of cooling than of heating, Mr. Zinn reports. Despite the common impression to the contrary—that the cabins will have to be heated—compression of the rarefied air found at high altitudes will raise its temperatures past the comfort point.

Trouble From Cosmic Rays.

Radio reception will be difficult at altitudes around 50,000 feet because of the high interference of cosmic rays and auroral disturbances, it is predicted. Trouble will be experienced with gasoline motors using electrical ignition systems because of ionization of the atmosphere from the same electrical phenomena that add to the difficulties of radio reception.

"At first thought it may seem unimportant," Mr. Zinn writes, "but in Germany in actually testing motors at 30,000 to 40,000 feet, it was noted that ionization affected the gasoline so that it would not completely vaporize in the carburetor, thus reducing engine efficiency."

Should stratosphere planes of the future stick to the gasoline motor, the problem can be solved by building electrodes into the carburetors. Diesel engines, another possibility, are not faced by that particular difficulty.

Newest Check on Mars Shows It an Arid Planet

Washington.—It was once the fashion to suggest that the ever-curious marks on the planet Mars were due to some human-like agency; a race of Martian men who had constructed gigantic ditches or canals. Then when the markings were found to change with the Martian seasons the hypothesis was brought forward that the markings were, perhaps, plant growth and other vegetation.

But even this last suggestion that the canals on Mars were merely great straight stretches of plant growth (possibly like the mid-western shelter belt may be a century hence) has had its difficulties.

One of the most recent of these troubles comes from the great Mt. Wilson observatory of the Carnegie institution of Washington where it has been found, from a study of the light spectrum of Mars, that the water vapor present in its atmosphere, at least in the equatorial region where the observations were made. An outside limit for water vapor in Mars' air would be about 5 per cent of that present in the earth's surface.

Oracle's Speaking Tube in Syrian Pagan Chapel

London.—A pagan chapel, equipped with a speaking tube for an oracle, has been discovered in ruins of 2300 B. C., in northern Syria.

The chapel is a discovery of a joint expedition of the British museum and the British school of archeology at the mound called Tall Brak. It was unearthed in ruins of a private home of its day, not far from a huge palace.

A hole in the clay semi-circular altar in the chapel was traced by the archeologists as leading to an adjoining hidden room, where a priest might hide and whisper through the tube in the manner of oracles.

Birds' Housing Problems

Benicia, Calif.—Human beings aren't the only bipeds who have housing problems. Something of the kind seems to be the case among the birds, too. Emerson A. Stoner of this city reports finding one nest of which had been used by three different species of birds. The nest was that of a black phoebe, and it contained at its bottom three phoebe's eggs. Above them was a thin layer of hairs, and on that there were three eggs of the western fly-catcher and one of the dwarf cowbird.

Italy Plants Guayule

Rome.—Guayule, rubber-yielding shrub of the arid lands in California and adjacent parts of Mexico, will be planted in quantity during 1938 in the southern part of the Italian peninsula, in Sicily, and in the Trans-Mediterranean province of Cyrenaica. This is part of Italy's effort toward economic self-sufficiency, and in particular it is hoped will provide an emergency supply of rubber in case of war.

Pretty Things for Easter

THESE three dresses are up high on the list of fashion's favorites, and you can easily make them at home by using our simple, easy-to-follow patterns, each accompanied by a complete and detailed sew chart. Start right now, for even if there's a shiver in the air at this moment, Easter is not very far off! And you'll want to be ready!

Dress With Lifted Waistline.
This is a very, very popular fashion because it makes you look so slim and graceful, what with the waistline high in front, and soft gathers above it, the gently flaring skirt. Made up in a prett-print or silk crepe, it will be lovely for Easter and for all Spring. Be sure to wear a bunch of flowers at the neckline.

A Jumper Frock for Girls.
This is one of the sweetest and most becoming styles ever invented for girls of school age, just about the time they begin to shoot up so fast that you can almost see them grow! Make the jumper of linen, gingham or percale, and why not make two or three blouses to go with it? One of linen, one of dimity, and one of organdie.

Everybody Likes Dirndl Frock.
The square neckline, the full rippling skirt and tight little waist, are so flattering to slim figures! Here's a charming dirndl with just the right air of quaintness and freshness about it. Choose a gay flowered print, or a cheerful plain color, pale or bright. But be sure, whether you make it up in silk or cotton, to choose a crisp fabric so that the skirt will flare as it should.

The Patterns.
1481 is designed for sizes 14 to 42 (32 to 42 bust.) Size 16 (34) requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material.
1996 is designed for 6 to 14 years. Size 8 requires 1 3/4 yards of 39-inch material for the jumper; 1 3/4 yards for the blouse. Also 2 1/2 yards of bias facing for neck and armholes of jumper.

1480 is designed for sizes 12 to 20 (30 to 38 bust). Size 14 (32) requires 3 1/2 yards of 39-inch material, plus 1 1/4 yards of ribbon for belt and 3/4 yards of braid or ribbon for trimming.

TIPS to Gardeners

Choosing Flowers

IF YOU want flowers that come into bloom early, plant seeds of nasturtium, Virginia stock, zinnia, sunflower, bachelor's button and alyssum.

Among the easiest flowers to grow are the nasturtium, alyssum and California poppy.

To achieve brilliant color in the garden with a minimum of effort, grow petunia and zinnia. They require some care early in the season, but once established they grow luxuriantly, and nothing provides more color.

If snapdragons and asters, though among your flower favorites, are barred from your garden because of the prevalence of rust and wilt, return them to their deserved places by getting rust and wilt resistant varieties from your seed dealer.

In your rock garden, try some of the following: African daisy, linaria, lobelia, statice, verbena and Virginia stock, among the annuals; and columbine, English daisy, forget-me-not and Iceland poppy, of the perennials.

A Pig Was to Blame

By the disobedience of a lad in 1809, a garden gate in Rhode Island was left open, and a pig got in and destroyed a few plants. A quarrel between the owners of the garden and the pig resulted, which spread among their friends, defeated the Federal candidate for the legislature, and gave the state a senator by whose vote war was declared in 1812 with Great Britain.—Pat Paragraphs.

ARE YOU ONLY A 3/4 WIFE?

Men can never understand a three-quarter wife—a wife who is lovable for three weeks of the month—but a hell-cat the fourth. Funeral Service Thursday For Former Klemme Man

LAWHORN DIED EARLY TUESDAY MORNING AT A MASON CITY HOSPITAL

Had Been In Poor Health For The Past Three Years

Mr. Lawhorn, who had not been the best of health for the past three years, had been a patient at hospital for nearly three weeks.

Mr. Lawhorn was united in marriage to Miss Lula Bateman October, 1893 in Wisconsin. The couple immediately took up residence in Lena, Illinois, where they lived until coming to Klemme. Their children were born to Mr. Lawhorn and they are now residing at Peoria, Illinois; Mrs. Lawhorn, and Mrs. Lorraine Kelley of Topeka, Kansas.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawhorn came to Klemme, Iowa, in 1902. They lived until 1920 when they returned and moved to Garner, Iowa, where they have since lived. The late Mr. Lawhorn was sold to Mr. and Mrs. Neuberger.

besides his wife and children, Mr. Lawhorn is also survived by his brothers: Will of Lena, Illinois, and George and Charles of Peoria, Iowa; and one sister, Mrs. Mary Bryum of Tucson, Arizona.

Funeral services will be held at the Methodist Church at Garner Thursday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. and interment will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Mr. Lawhorn was well known throughout this part of the county. He was known as a good natured, hard working man and was a good husband, a kind father and a helpful neighbor. He was a member of the Farmers' Union and was a successful member of that organization.

Funeral services will be held at the Methodist Church at Garner Thursday afternoon at 2:00 p.m. and interment will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

P. M. S. Wednesday, April 6th

The W. F. M. S. of the M. E. Church will meet on Wednesday, April 6th, instead of Thursday, April 7th, at the home of Mrs. Wm. Wellemeyer. Please plan to attend.

U-Em Bridge Club Met
At Home Of Mrs. Kingery

Mrs. A. L. Kingery was hostess of the U-Em bridge club at her home last Thursday. High scores were won by Mrs. F. J. Arnold and travel prizes were won by Mrs. George Lawhorn, Mrs. Kudje and Mrs. Arnold. Lunch was served by the hostess.

Funeral Of Mrs.
Palmby At Iowa Falls Monday

Those from this vicinity who attended the funeral of Mrs. Dan Palmby at Iowa Falls, Monday, were Mrs. R. W. Elder, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Larsen and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Katter.

The Herald's Will Meet Sunday

The King's Herald's will meet Monday morning at 10:00 o'clock at the Methodist Church. A large attendance is desired.

All men are born equal—which makes it all the harder to forgive the success of our friends.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q.—If, when I get my soil-depleting allotment, I find that I have seeded too many oats, how can I dispose of these oats?

A.—You may pasture the excess oats sufficiently to prevent the maturity of grain or plow them under as a green manure crop.

Q.—Can oats which are pastured be considered as non-depleting, even when no grasses have been seeded with the oats?

A.—Yes.

Q.—If I find that I have left more land for corn than my crop acreage allotment, what crops can I use on this excess land?

A.—You may use sweet sorghums, sudan grass, millet or soybeans.

Q.—Would these crops be classified as depleting or non-depleting?

A.—The sweet sorghums, sudan grass and millet would be classified as depleting crops if they were harvested for grain, seeds, syrup or silage. The soybeans would be depleting if they were harvested or matured as grain or seed. Soybeans cut for hay, however, are non-depleting.

Q.—Could I plant sweet corn for fodder or silage without having it counted in with my corn acreage allotment?

A.—Sweet corn will be regarded as corn acreage for the purpose of determining whether the corn acreage allotment on a farm has been exceeded, except when the sweet corn is contracted for canning or sold for roasting ears.

Q.—Can I summer fallow thistle patches and not have these patches classified as soil-depleting acreage?

A.—Thistle patches on cropland, if summer fallowed, in order to be classed as non-depleting must be in a solid block contiguous to the side or end of the field and the line between such portion and the remaining portion of the field must be straight. Therefore, small, irregular patches of thistle could not be summer fallowed and considered non-depleting.

Q.—Will the sowing of red clover and alfalfa seed count toward my soil-building allowance?

A.—Yes, if you file a statement showing the origin and purity of such seed on Form NCR-221, which may be obtained from your county AAA office. This statement must show what fields you have seeded to the clover and alfalfa.

KIRKWOOD FREIGHT TRUCK LINE BUSINESS SOLD TO GARNER MAN

Ferd Grell, who operates a freight truck line out of Garner, Monday closed a deal with Wm. Kirkwood, Klemme, whereby he became the proprietor of the freight trucking business which has been operated by Kirkwood for the past seven years.

Mr. Kirkwood has been making trips every Tuesday and Friday to haul freight from Mason City. Mr. Grell plans to give Klemme daily service over the same route.

Entertained At Bridge Tuesday Evening

Dr. and Mrs. A. H. Dulmes and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lewis entertained at five tables of bridge at the Lewis home Tuesday evening. High scores were won by Mrs. F. J. Arnold and Art Kudje, low score by Ed. Buntenbach and travel prize by Henry Lewis. Lunch was served following the games.

New Enterprise In Klemme Is Doing A Large Business

SWANSON'S HATCHERY HERE IS MODERNLY EQUIPPED PLANT

A few weeks ago Albert Swanson, proprietor of Swanson's Leghorn Farm and Hatchery, moved his plant equipment to Klemme.

Mr. Swanson remodeled a barn in southwest Klemme at the Straatman place where his brother Leonard resides. Leonard spent most of the winter getting the building in shape for the hatchery.

The interior of the building is nicely finished and arranged and houses the big electrically operated hatching machine which has a capacity of 20,000 eggs. One room of the building is arranged and equipped for starting baby chicks and in this department is an electric heated battery and also a Jamesway brooder, both used for starting baby chicks.

The main hatchery room is large, well lighted and ventilated, and besides housing the big machine, also gives ample room for grading and inspecting eggs.

Albert is assisted in the plant work by his brother, Leonard, who is on the job most of the time.

For some years Mr. Swanson has specialized in raising S. C. White Leghorns and his flock is known as one of the best in Northern Iowa. He raises his chickens on his farm northeast of Klemme, and until this spring had his hatching plant on the farm. He finds it more convenient, both for himself and his customers to have the plant located in town.

New Automatic Gas Pump Installed At Co-Op. Station

The Hancock County Co-Op Oil Association has installed a new up-to-date Wayne automatic gas pump at their station here. The new pump is of the computing type and as gas is pumped into the car it registers the amount of gallons, and the exact amount in dollars and cents, including Federal and State tax.

The new pump is a good improvement to the equipment at the local station.

Civic Club Banquet And Meeting Thursday Night

GRASSHOPPER CONTROL PLANS ARE WELL LAID

Iowa is "digging in" and laying plans for a successful campaign against the threatened 1938 grasshopper outbreak.

In addition to a $500,000 grasshopper-control carryover fund from last summer, congress has voted 2 million dollars to provide poison bait for the campaign against grasshoppers in the United States this year. Iowa, which from present indications will be the third most heavily infested state in the nation, will benefit greatly in this respect, points out C. J. Drake, state entomologist.

One-fourth of the potential bait needs for combatting the 'hoppers this year will be in the state by the time Grasshopper eggs are hatching, according to plans, Drake said. For Iowa this will mean at least five trainloads of poison bait.

County mixing stations will be set up where farmers can obtain bait. A small service charge for mixing the bait ingredients—bran, sawdust and poison—will be charged (about 15 or 20 cents a sack), but the materials themselves will be furnished by the federal government free of charge. Drake estimates that normally 200 pounds of wet bait will cover 10 acres.

Details for conducting the campaign are being formulated by the State Grasshopper Control Committee composed of R. K. Bliss, director of the Iowa State College extension Service, R. E. Buchanan, director of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station, Thomas Curran, state secretary of agriculture and C. J. Drake, state entomologist. This committee will meet with district extension workers to outline plans. Five regional meetings with county agents are planned, and county committees will be set up in each county.

While the whole of Iowa is infested with grasshopper eggs, the infestation is relatively light in 15 northern counties and heaviest in the southern and western parts of the state.

There has been no loss in the hatchability of the 'hopper eggs, G. C. Decker, Iowa State College entomologist, reports, and the only damage that rain can do will come at hatching time, not before the eggs are hatched.

Surprise Party Held On Mrs. Walter Rosendahl Thursday

Walter Rosendahl planned and successfully carried out a surprise party in honor of his wife's birthday, Thursday evening, March 24. Mrs. Rosendahl had gone to choir practice and upon arriving home, found the following guests there to greet her:

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Barz and Doris; Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Barz, Harley and Graydon; Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Barz and Darlene; Mrs. Louise Rosendahl; Mr. and Mrs. Werner Schlavin and LaVohn; Mr. and Mrs. Ewald Josten and Calvin; Mr. and Mrs. Werner Priebe; Mr. and Mrs. Erwin Rosendahl and family; Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Lemke; Gerald Barz and Bernard Meyers.

The evening was spent socially, after which delicious refreshments were served. At a late hour the guests departed, wishing Mrs. Rosendahl many more happy birthdays.

Returns Home From Hospital At Oakdale

Mrs. Donald Neuberger, who has been a patient at the hospital at Oakdale for more than a year, has so far improved in health that she was able to return home last Wednesday. Miss Irene Bridges will assist with the house work at the Neuberger home.

COACH KINGERY AND SHAMROCK SQUAD WILL BE HONORED

Al Mitchell, Mason City, Will Be Principal Speaker Of The Evening

The second quarterly meeting and banquet of the Klemme Civic Club will be held at the Klemme High School gymnasium on this Thursday evening. The banquet for this meeting will be served by the Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist Church.

Basketball Squad Will Be Feted

Coach A. L. Kingery and his champion squad of Shamrock basketball players will have honor places at the banquet table. Al Mitchell, sports editor of the Mason City Globe-Gazette, will be the principle speaker of the evening.

W. C. Keraus, president of the Civic Club announces that there are already over fifty paid-up members in the Club and that a number of others have signified their intentions of joining up. The main purpose of the Civic Club is to make Klemme a better town in which to live.

The entertainment committee in charge of arrangements promise to have a good program for this meeting. The committee in charge of the banquet expects to have plates for over sixty persons at the table.

SHAMROCK PLAYERS HONORED

Two Shamrock basketball players were recently honored by being named on All North Iowa teams selected by the Globe-Gazette. Ray Jorgenson, Jr. was placed on the first team as center and Paul Schuldt was named guard on the second team.

Jorgenson and Schuldt also won honorable mention positions on the All State team for 1938.

Coal Keeps Place as Chief Source of Economic Energy

By WATSON DAVIS

Washington.—Coal is still power king and is the energy source upon which the future must rely, despite the relative decrease in its use that has occurred in recent years.

Natural supplies of oil and gas and the electricity that comes from water power will not in future years supply our needs. Technical experts look forward to the day when coal will supply us not only with the bulk of our power from central stations but with superior synthetic fuels, such as gas for heating, liquid fuels for internal combustion engines, and smokeless solid fuel for home heating.

Inevitably an end to flush production of petroleum and natural gas will arrive, not suddenly but gradually and steadily, a survey made by the Ontario Research foundation shows. This will be due both to enforced conservation measures and to changes in the economics of the industry. Synthetic manufacture of oil and gas from coal will become more economically justified with increased cost of natural oil and gas. Relatively less coal will be burned raw.

Much Coal Is Processed.

Even now figures show that almost a third of the bituminous coal produced in America is processed. A single coking plant near Pittsburgh consumes one per cent of all the coal mined in the whole world.

Processing of coal, taking out the rich chemicals that dye our textiles, make our medicines, supply raw materials for industries, creating gaseous and liquid fuels, and leaving coke for metallurgical and other uses, will inevitably become one of the largest of our industries.

Public health factors, and the economic losses due to smoke that blights many of our large cities will demand that smokeless fuels and fuels processed and purified for special purposes be used practically exclusively. Burning untreated coal may be considered almost a crime. We derive our power from the fossil sunshine of past geologic eras. We are living on the energy savings of the past. We are, alas, scattering our power resources over the face of the earth in fine dust and degraded energy.

Sleep Fast in Georgia Did Not Break Record

Washington.—The University of Georgia students who stayed awake for 100 hours for scientific investigations did not break any records, although they came close to it. The longest sleep fast on record, apparently, is that of human guinea pigs in another scientific study who went as long as 114 hours without sleeping.

Man cannot live without sleep, any more than he can live without food, but the period of wakefulness which would be fatal to a human is not definitely known. Dogs have been able to survive sleep fasts of more than 14 days, though others die after being kept awake that long.

Sufferers from insomnia generally believe that they have hung up records for sleepless periods. They often fail to take into account, however, the daytime cat naps which, added to the few hours they sleep at night, provide them with a fair amount of rest.

Farm Produce Outlets Sought With Large Fund

East Lansing, Mich.—Search for industrial uses for farm products will be speeded up through the use of a $500,000 grant by the Rackham fund to Michigan State college here.

In addition to the researches looking to industrial uses, one special objective of investigators will be to make out of cornstalks, sawdust, straw, or other farm wastes, some material to be plowed into the soil for its physical improvement, as fertilizers are used for its chemical improvement. The sought-for material, by rendering the soil lighter and more porous, will increase its water-holding power, and thus indirectly make for better control of both floods and erosion.

New Features on Moon

London.—Revision of our maps of the moon may be necessary as a result of the discovery of a series of craters and walled plains, near the edge of our satellite's visible disk by H. Percy Wilkins, British astronomer. Occupying twenty degrees of latitude on the southeast edge of the moon, this tangle of walled valleys, craters and high peaks has escaped discovery for many years.

Wealth in Minerals Brought to Surface by Many Volcanoes

Washington.—Boiling floods of lava and glowing clouds of gas are not the only products of volcanoes, geologists find. Many volcanoes have brought useful and valuable minerals—gold, silver, diamonds, or oil, close to the surface where men can get at them.

Reporting his field findings to the Geological Society of Washington, Dr. A. H. Koshmann, of the United States geological survey, told of the Cripple Creek volcano near Pikes Peak, Colo., whose eruption 25,000,000 years ago brought millions of dollars worth of gold into the rocks near the surface, where it could be reached by mining operations.

After the first eruptions, the crater floor collapsed, carrying leaves and tree trunks deep into the earth, where they are now found as fossils.

Source of Big Walsh Fortune.

Near Silverton, Colo., a similar volcano brought 250 cubic miles of new material to the surface at about the same time as the Cripple Creek eruption. This created the famous Camp Bird mining area, which built the fabulous fortune of the late Tom Walsh. To date, more than $270,000,000 in gold and silver have been mined in the San Juan area near Silverton, of which $30,000,000 came from Camp Bird. After the first eruption of the Silverton volcano, one of the craters, eight miles in diameter, collapsed, opening hundreds of fissures in the surrounding rock, which were later filled with rich deposits of gold and silver, some of them five to seven miles long.

Volcanic activity in the ancient Gulf Coastal plain, an area which now includes Texas, Arkansas, and Mississippi, brought diamonds to Arkansas, and formed oil traps in other areas. Erupting 80,000,000 years ago, the ancient volcanoes were discovered during drilling operations only since 1915.

New Mexico, a million or so years ago, had a volcanic lake in the Valles mountains similar to the present Crater lake in Oregon. This crater, which is the largest explosive crater known, was 17 miles long and 13 miles wide.

One Wire Carries 12 Radio Phone Messages

New York.—A peek into the future of long distance telephonic communication was given at the meeting of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers here. Developments in the use of existing telephone wires as guide paths for carrier waves has made it possible to have 12 messages going over the same wire without interference.

Two engineers from the Bell laboratories, C. W. and E. I. Green, disclosed new details of the carrier system for toll cables.

The new advances are the culmination of a long range program of applying high frequency waves to wires. Early developments utilized special wires but the new work has succeeded in using existing cables, both aerial and underground.

"Plans already under way call for the application of large numbers of these systems to meet the rapid growth in long distance traffic," said the engineers.

Cesium, Electric Eye Retina, Should Be Pure

New York.—Cesium, rare earth that makes the electric eye see, will not work if it contains more than one ounce of impurities in three tons of metal, reports Dr. J. J. Kennedy of the Maywood Chemical works, describing the cesium mining and purifying industry to the American Chemical society.

Mined in the Black Hills of South Dakota, pollucite, the dull and gumlike ore of cesium, worth fifteen dollars a pound, contains from 1 to 30 per cent of cesium oxide. Purified by successive stages, and reduced to a metal that burns in air and explodes in water, cesium is used as the sensitive metal in photoelectric cells—the "electric eyes" of industry—and as a "getter" in radio tubes. A radio tube "getter" burns up the last bits of oxygen that the vacuum pump couldn't catch.

Man an Articulate Ape

Philadelphia.—Man owes his brain and his hands to his zoological kin, the apes, Dr. Earnest A. Hooton, Harvard anthropologist, states in Frontiers, a publication of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. "Man himself is but an articulate ape with acquirements, notably language and material culture," concludes Dr. Hooton. "Only the acquirements are human, the rest is a simian legacy."

New Dental Filling

Berlin.—A new dental filling that works like the cement and concrete used for building under-water structures in that it requires the presence of moisture in order to harden, has been developed in Germany. Saliva is a hardening agent for the new cement, which is colorless and, it is claimed, does not injure the pulp or the nerve of the tooth.

TIPS Gardeners

Plant With Care

EXERCISE care in planting also in preparing to plant. Though soil may be rich, it not produce as it should unless it is prepared thoroughly.

A primary consideration in planting is to have the soil ably moist; damp, but not circumstances demand that plant when the ground is moisten trenches or drills dropping the seed.

To retain moisture after ing, cover seeds immediately fine earth and press down firm.

Harold Coulter, vegetable part of the Ferry Seed Ins. advises that temperature be sidered at the time of plant. Too high a temperature is as detrimental to seed germination as one too low. A temperature between 65 and 75 degrees is most favorable.

Soil must be loose so that sprouts can push through roots develop. Where the forms a heavy crust, it may times be broken sufficiently seedlings through by gently ing the soil with a rake.

GREAT— GREAT— GREAT— GREAT— GRANDCHILDREN

Pedigree Ferry's Seeds often developed and improved for six, eight, and even ten generations before they are ready for use. Year after year, at the Ferry-Morse Seed-Breeding Institute, the best flower and vegetable plants are selected from each year's experimental crop and their seeds planted for another improved generation. By this process, desirable characteristics are strengthened, weaknesses eliminated.

And Ferry's Seeds must be true. They will grow. So the Institute makes 50,000 tests for growth ability each year before planting—and tests each variety for true seed to type!

BOSTON YANKEE GOES TO COURT

'Joe' Kennedy, Red-Headed Irishman, Will Be New Type Ambassador to England's Austere Court of St. James

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

A red-headed American business man, the blood of old Erin coursing through his veins, is creating a sensation at Great Britain's austere Court of St. James.

His name is Joe Kennedy, the son of a one time Boston politician and saloon keeper, new United States ambassador to England.

Joe Kennedy is placing his sturdy business shoes in the footsteps where formerly walked philosophers, poets, historians and members of the social elite. He is not America's first business man ambassador, but he is the first business man to get the job without first showing his listing in society's "Who's Who."

Joe Kennedy, who made a million dollars before he was 35, who organized the successful Securities Exchange commission and served as chairman of the Maritime commission, may be ushering in a new type of diplomacy. Others claim this right-hand man of the Roosevelt administration is being exiled by his appointment to St. James. Still others say the ambassadorship is a springboard to the Presidency.

More likely is the answer that President Roosevelt recognizes the need for a British ambassador of exceptional business ability, a man who can maneuver the proposed reciprocal trade treaty to a successful conclusion. Joe Kennedy, more than any other New Dealer, is the man who can do it.

Red Tape Bothers Him.

This dynamic American is apt to shock St. James. As SEC chairman and head of the Maritime commission he showed his distaste for official red tape and soft-couched procedure. In diplomacy as nowhere else, he will find just such conditions.

The Kennedy career reads like an unbroken success story, in which love and family life have played an important part. At forty-nine he is the father of nine good looking children. His wife, the former Rose Fitzgerald of Boston, is so attractive and slim at forty-seven that John Boettiger, Roosevelt son-in-law, blurted out when he first met her:

"At last I believe in the stork!" Kennedy started as a Boston newsboy in a career that stretches from New England to Hollywood and back again. At Harvard, where he finished in 1912, he was a star baseball player and made $5,000 driving a sight-seeing bus during summer vacations. By the time he graduated he decided on a banking career, became a state examiner for 18 months and—when only twenty-five—was actually a bank president!

He Fought With Roosevelt.

Kennedy's first meeting with President Roosevelt came during the war when the Irish Bostonian was assistant general manager of the Fore River shipyards and the President was assistant secretary of the navy. It is recalled that the angry navy official dispatched troops to take over a ship which Kennedy refused to release.

Next came three years as manager of the stock department at Hayden, Stone company, a Boston banking house. It was there that Kennedy got the bright idea of buying American option rights on foreign motion pictures. That started his movie career.

Kennedy was new blood in Hollywood, one of the first young business men to approach the movie industry from the banking end. From 1926 to 1930 he was in the center of mammoth mergers and shifts in the big companies. By 1929, just before the crash, he decided to get out of the movie business. But during his brief Hollywood career he had been president of the Film Booking Offices of dled film companies in need of overhauling. He settled $73,000,000 of mail contract claims of 23 shipping companies against the government for $750,000 and laid down the rule that future government subsidies to shipping should be made only where there was a chance of accomplishing something by it.

Then last November, he released a sensational report listing the needs of American shipping, a report that will probably go down in history as another example of Kennedy foresight and common sense. When every other nation was building huge liners, Joe Kennedy predicted the day when fast aircraft would make liners impractical. Therefore he recommended emphasis on trans-Atlantic airplanes, together with construction of small and sensible ocean vessels.

He's "Pep" Personified.

To staid Britishers Joe Kennedy may be the perfect example of American "pep." Big and tall, he likes to work in his shirt sleeves, make instantaneous decisions and ride airplanes instead of trains. He is a go-getter, equally at home with any kind of an audience.

It is significant that Joe Kennedy is one of the few New Dealers who still retain the respect of business at large. President Roosevelt is sacrificing an important window dresser on the home front when he sends this Irishman to St. James.

Built originally for Pierpont Morgan, the new United States embassy at London should be large enough for the Kennedy family—mother, father and nine smart youngsters.

first to board President Roosevelt's bandwagon, while the present Chief Executive was still governor of New York and Jim Farley was still a small time politician.

Reformed Wall Street.

Kennedy money backed the 1932 campaign and the dynamic Kennedy personality gladdened many a vote-getting tour. When it was all over he spent two and a half months reorganizing Radio Corporation of America and hobnobbing with his Wall street friends, trying to convince them that the world was changed. They wouldn't listen. Few people have forgotten the turbulent days when the Securities Exchange commission was established with Kennedy at its head. Almost to a man, Wall street brokers protested it would wreck their profession. But the measure went through and today you'll find that a majority of SEC's old opponents are its staunchest supporters.

After SEC was established he left the government and returned to making money again, only to be recalled when President Roosevelt needed leadership for the Maritime commission. He handled American shipping interests as he had han-

That is the best indication of the importance the President attached to the British post.

An equally interesting sidelight will be the Kennedy family's "invasion" of London. Never before has the United States sent an Irishman to London, storm center of English-Irish dissension. Boston blue bloods, social registerites from New York, Philadelphia and Washington will be presented next June to Queen Elizabeth at Buckingham palace by Rose Kennedy, a woman who was never invited to join the exclusive Junior League. American debutantes cannot appear before the queen of England unless Rose Kennedy sanctions it.

If Joe Kennedy engineers the Anglo-American trade agreement he will return to the United States more thoroughly in the spotlight than ever. Though some may consider him an "exile" in London, he can recall that five former ambassadors to St. James later became President. Who knows but that this "typical" American business man may follow their example? Hard headed business men also make good Presidents!

Lesson for April 3

SERVING OTHER RACES

LESSON TEXT—Mark 7:24-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—God is no respecter of persons. Acts 10:34.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Lord of All.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Lord of All.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Showing Good Will to Other Races.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Practicing Christian Brotherhood Toward All Races.

"God is no respecter of persons" (Acts 10:34). He who by reason of His infinite knowledge might well draw lines of distinction between them is loving and gracious toward all, not willing that any should perish, extending his mercy to men of all conditions and all races. But men, whose knowledge is so limited that they cannot even rightly judge the thoughts of their own hearts, are quick to discriminate against their fellow man because he is of a different race, color, or social position.

A leader in the Southern Baptist church recently pointed out that the number of heathen in the world has increased about two and a half times as rapidly as the number of Christians, which means that at the rate of progress of missions during the last generation the world has become more heathen at the rate of six million a year, and now we are retarding the process still further. Because of financial depression we are recalling missionaries. When the world is ablaze with sin and God-denying political theories we withhold the gospel it needs. It has well been said that such strategy is like closing the hospital because an epidemic is in progress.

Jesus had gone into Syrophenicia and the region of Decapolis (look them up on the map) to rest. But the need of the Gentile people (to whom He was not at that time called to minister) impelled Him to help them also. Note how they were stimulated to believe, how their faith was tried, but triumphant.

I. Faith Encouraged.

The Greek woman and the man of Decapolis were led to believe in Christ in two different ways.

1. By hearing about Jesus. The woman "heard of him" (v. 25). Paul says, "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (Rom. 10:17). Are we diligent in season and out of season, telling the story of Jesus and His love? If so, men and women of our acquaintance will hear of Him and be ready to call on Him in the day of their trouble.

2. By a personal meeting with Jesus. The man was deaf; he could not hear about Jesus, but he could see Him. To him the Lord came in person, and by the sign language, related in verse 33, He stirred his heart to believe.

II. Faith Tested.

1. By obstacles. The woman met what seemed to be a sharp rebuke (v. 27), although it was no doubt much tempered by the tender voice of Jesus, and by the fact that He did not use the word "dogs" as the Jews did in speaking of the Gentiles. He spoke kindly, and He talked of the "little dogs" which were the pets of the household. But her faith was greatly tried, just as ours often is, not that it should fail, but that its strength might be demonstrated.

2. By natural handicaps. Jesus put no impediment in the way of the man, for he was already hindered by nature. How often do we not feel that in our very personalities and bodies are those things which hinder our full apprehension of the grace of God. Shall we then give up in discouragement? No. The man believed right through the barrier of unhearing ears and a speechless tongue. We can do likewise by the grace of God.

III. Faith Rewarded.

1. By deliverance from the devil. The woman's daughter was set free because of her faith. Men and women around us need to be delivered from the devil. Perhaps you who read these lines are in need of such deliverance. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house" (Acts 16:31).

2. By deliverance from personal limitations. The man's "ears were opened . . . and he spake plain" (v. 35). What is the unfortunate trait of personality, the handicap of body or mind that holds you back from accepting Christ as Saviour, or, having done so, from the full and free development of your spiritual life? Faith in Christ cuts right through the hindering inability. He said to Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness."

Temper

We are told, "Let not the sun go down on your wrath," but I would add, never act or write till it has done so. This rule has saved me from many an act of folly. It is wonderful what a different view we take of the same event four-and-twenty hours after it has happened.

Forgive Your Enemies

And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you.—Ephesians 4:32

AROUND THE HOUSE

When Cooking Cheese.—In cooking anything with cheese use a low temperature, because intense heat makes cheese tough and stringy.

Lemon Slices in Punch.—Lemon halves and slices are apt to give a bitter taste to punch if they are left in it. It is best to wait until serving time to add them.

Measuring Flour.—Wheat flour is one of the easiest ingredients in baking to mismeasure. For best results always sift flour and measure by spoonfuls into a cup, being careful not to shake the filled cup.

For Graceful Lines.—To make the hips look smaller wear dull finished fabrics. To look more slender wear one-piece dresses. A contrasting blouse and skirt will make you look shorter. The use of jabots or long scarfs will make the bust line appear smaller. Patch pockets make the hips look larger. A contrasting belt will make the figure look shorter.

2 Steps in Fighting Discomfort of COLDS

1. ENTERS BODY THROUGH GASTROINTESTINAL TRACT TO EASE PAIN.

2. RELIEVES THROAT PAIN, RAWNESS.

All it usually costs to relieve the misery of a cold today—is 3¢ to 5¢—relief for the period of your cold 15¢ to 25¢. Hence no family need neglect even minor head colds.

Here is what to do: Take two BAYER tablets when you feel a cold coming on—with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package. Relief comes rapidly.

The Bayer method of relief is the way many doctors now approve. You take Bayer Aspirin for relief—then if you are not improved promptly, you call the family doctor.

Stomach Gas?

Sioux City, Iowa.—Dava Louis Hughes, 1417 Hamilton St., says: "After eating I would belch gas and often would have acid indigestion. I had no pep or energy. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery relieved me of the gas and I felt O.K. in every respect after using it." Buy it in liquid or tablets from your druggist now. See how vigorous you'll soon feel.

Simple Patch Makes This Quilt Block

Pattern 1583.

Get out your scrap bag and get ready to start your Calico Cat quilt. Each cat patch measures about 4 by 8 inches and is so easy to apply. You'll be delighted with the colorfulness. Use it on a pillow too; it's very effective. Pattern 1583 contains accurate pattern pieces; a diagram of block which serves as a guide for placing the patches and suggests contrasting materials; complete, simple instructions for cutting, sewing and finishing, together with a large chart; diagram of quilt to help arrange blocks for single and double bed size.

Send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) for this pattern to The Sewing Circle, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Please write your name, address and pattern number plainly.

Tragedy Was Difficult in Ye Olden Tymes

The trials of a strolling player in Eighteenth century England may be judged from a handbill announcing a performance of the "deep and affecting tragedy of Oedipus, or the Force of Love," at the "Old Theater in East Grinstead," in 1758, quoted in "Portrait of Mrs. Siddons," by Saml. Royde-Smith. It says:

"Mrs. Crawford (a contemporary of the great Sarah Siddons) had a shriek and a groan that made rows of spectators start from their seats. Mrs. Siddons went further; when she shrieked the house shrieked with her; at her groan young ladies swooned at their boxes."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets made of tiny Apple are effective in removing accumulated body waste.—Adv.

Absent Ones

The absent ones are usually found in the wrong.

NERVOUS?

Do you feel so nervous you want to scream? Are you cross and irritable? Do you scold and fret to yourself?

If you are an edge, try LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND. For three generations one woman has told another how to go "smiling through" with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It helps Nature tone up the system, thus lessening the discomforts from the functional disorders which women must endure.

Make a note NOW to get a bottle of world-famous Pinkham's Compound today WITHOUT FAIL from your druggist—more than a million women have written in letters requesting benefit.

Why not try LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S TROUBLE COMPOUND?

Proper Diversion

Of all the diversions of life, there is none so proper to fill up the empty spaces as the reading of useful and entertaining authors.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress. Burning, stinging or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney trouble. You may suffer nagging backache, peevishness, headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous; all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

Washington.—There is a strange similarity between certain things that are going on in Russia at this time and phases of events right here in the United States. So much alike are these things, indeed, that one hears a great deal of comment on the circumstance.

Most persons are familiar, of course, with the fact that the dictator, Stalin, and the clique at present, and for the moment only, that is in his favor, are engaged in "liquidation" of traitors. Now, "liquidation" of opposition in Russia means death at the hands of a firing squad. It means putting that opposition under the ground for eternity. This is accomplished in Russia under Stalin by the simple expedient of a so-called military trial. The farce that is called a trial is nothing more nor less than an exposition of charges against the accused who are, without exception, tortured until they "confess." That is to say, a torture in jail, a physical maltreatment, is administered until the accused would rather have death than a continuation of the physical suffering.

This thing is resorted to in Russia wherever and whenever Stalin or the clique then holding his favor believes it advisable to instill some more fear into the millions which fate placed in Russia. That is to say if, as always is the case with human beings, Stalin makes a mistake or his plans go awry, somebody must be the goat. In a land where the government has absolute power over life and death, the easiest, simplest way of solving the problem is by shooting off a few extra "counter revolutionists." Lately the purge in Russia has been directed at "counter revolutionaries" amongst the army officers. A few newspaper correspondents and government officials have been included just to make the propaganda effective on the proletariat.

The mock trials and the "liquidation" in Russia are being carried on at this time because it is charged, there are elements in Russia that are seeking to bring back Leon Trotsky. Trotsky has a different type of dictatorship by the proletariat in mind. He has to hide out in Mexico, or get shot himself. Anyway, the Stalin group announces boldly that Russia is going forward (whatever that means) and will brook no interference with its plans—even if it has to shoot off all of its army officers and most of its government officials.

So much for the Russian system.

Now, in calling attention to the similarity of conditions here, I have no notions of comparing them on the basis of the actual results. I want to deal with fundamentals, with principles. It seems to me this can be done without animosity. We will start, therefore, with one small and rather insignificant matter.

A few weeks ago, President Roosevelt named Stanley Reed to be an associate justice of the Supreme court of the United States. Mr. Reed had been solicitor general of the United States. The appointment can not be criticized in any way, because Mr. Reed will lend dignity to any job he undertakes. I think the country is fortunate in that appointment.

But when Mr. Reed was promoted, the President named Robert H. Jackson to fill the vacant place.

Well, most people were rather glad to see Mr. Jackson placed in a job where he has to do legal work instead of being a political mouthpiece. Their satisfaction was short-lived, however, because who should be named to succeed Mr. Jackson but Professor Thurman Arnold of Yale university. It is an appointment that is worse, if that is possible, than that which placed Mr. Jackson in the job originally. For Professor Arnold is not a man to breed confidence at any time. Particularly is this true when it is considered that he manages a job that has to do with governmental relations with business. Which is to say that if business could have no certainty or assurance or guidance from Mr. Jackson, it will be like looking for needles in haystacks to learn what Mr. Arnold's ideas are on business practices. Maybe I should say, it will be like chasing a very small insect that has a habit of biting and is equipped with a voracious appetite.

Thus we are come to the point of comparison. What does it mean that Messrs. Jackson and Arnold should be given those posts? The answer is comparatively simple, albeit quite significant. It means that President Roosevelt has taken control of the Department of Justice out of the hands of Attorney General Cummings. It means that he has yielded again to the left wing, the radical, advisers who have managed time after time to get the presidential ear and whisper convincingly into it. It means, as well, that Attorney General Cummings who was at first one of the great admirers of President Roosevelt is no longer among the presidential insiders and that he must be classed again as a Democrat as distinguished from the New Dealers.

But, you ask, what has that got to do with Russia, with Stalin, with liquidation of "counter revolutionaries," etc? Again, it seems to me that the analogy is plain. President Roosevelt has been convinced by the radicals and long-hairs that he has no great need any longer for the breed of simple, sound, sane thinkers, or the practical politicians. The advisors who are clinging to him like ivy to a wall have seen their plans go down in the crash of the depression and have to blame somebody. They argue that if their plans had not had interference from such as Mr. Cummings, or Secretary Roper or the Department of Commerce, or "Jim" Farley's practical politics, surely, the wishful thinkers would have succeeded. They could not line up the "counter revolutionaries" to be shot in this country, but they can destroy their political influence.

To carry the fundamental thought to its ultimate and logical conclusion, therefore, it is necessary only to explain that the great liberal group (which boasts by mouth or by print) has yet ever to agree among its own numbers. They seldom agree to start with, and they never agree at the finish. It is always the "other fellow" that is to blame. "If my plan had been followed we would have succeeded," etc. and so on. There is that counterpart in Russia, I insist. It proves beyond a shadow of a doubt that no one can define "liberalism."

I mentioned Postmaster General Farley as being on the outs with President Roosevelt. It would not be surprising if Mr. Farley quit his job. Observers in Washington know that he is pretty much disgusted by the refusal of the President to be guided by advice from the party's national chairman. It is possible, of course, that Mr. Farley will prefer to continue in the job as postmaster general and be quiet rather than expose the rupture. I understand he is giving that matter considerable thought these days, because, first of all, Mr. Farley believes in playing practical politics up to the hilt.

There is another rumor running around Washington about Mr. Farley. It is said in many places that Mr. Farley may decide to remain on the job so that he can be more effective in helping to restore control of the Democratic party machinery to the Democrats. That is to say, Mr. Farley knows, as every one else who understands politics knows, that the New Deal theories will fall of their own weight in due time. They will fall because so many of them are contrary to human nature and to American traditions. Being immensely practical, Mr. Farley holds that the Democratic party is a party which is a natural opposition group to the Republicans. It will live, as it ought to live, and will continue to be a factor in American government long after the New Deal has burned itself out. Mr. Farley, therefore, is anxious to lend a hand in rebuilding the Democratic party for the Democrats.

To that end, it is understood by many observers, there is a likely alignment between Mr. Farley and the canny, politically wise, "Cactus Jack" Garner, the Vice President.

Undoubtedly, there is a strong and growing group in the house and senate which has turned away from the President. Recent votes have shown an increasing number of Democrats that are willing to stand on their own bottom. A very recent illustration of this was the vote on the New Deal scheme to tax corporations owned by a small number of persons at a higher rate than those whose shares are widely owned. There are thousands of these, all small corporations. To have kept that provision in the new tax bill would have saved the face of a small coterie of presidential advisers and even the President, himself. But half of the Democrats joined with the Republicans to kill off the plan.

From this and other circumstances, it is plain to see how the rumored Farley-Garner alignment would be backed up by such political powers as Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi. Senator Harrison, it will be remembered, was rewarded for carrying New Deal buckets by having the President urge selection of Senator "Dear Alben" Barkley, of Kentucky, to be Democratic leader of the senate. Senator Barkley since has run into a fight for renomination in his own state. Senator Harrison is said to have a following of thirty-odd or more senators.

STAR DUST

By VIRGINIA VALE

JUDY GARLAND, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's wonder girl, will be starred in "The Wizard of Oz" and that is just the first of many fairy-tale pictures that you may expect to see in the next year.

Ever since "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" started its record-breaking runs, motion-picture producers have been wondering if a fairy tale with human actors wouldn't be a good bet. All the companies are looking for fairy tales, and as fast as they find them, all the younger stars from Shirley Temple to Deanna Durbin will be put to work in them.

Considering what has happened to other operatic songbirds in pictures, sudden stardom and then a complete loss of interest by the studios, Helen Jepson is very happy that she plays a fairly small part in "The Goldwyn Follies." She thinks that her career in pictures will probably last a long time if she doesn't want to be the whole show. She would like a chance to see some of the scenes that were cut out of "The Follies" though. There was one where she really looked like herself, no wig, no special make-up, and her favorite dress. There was another where Bobby Clark dropped her kerplunk on the floor.

Reports of "Merrily We Live" in which Brian Aherne co-stars with Constance Bennett were so good that the Hal Roach studio immediately wired to New York where he was vacationing and urged him to return at once. His new picture is to be "There Goes My Heart" and when he left a lot of young New York actresses said that the title expressed just what they felt.

"Arsene Lupin Returns" is a delightful and gripping jewel-thief mystery, played with great skill by Melvyn Douglas, Warren William, and Virginia Bruce. William's part, though not as large as the others, is a memorable one, for he plays a G-man who so relishes seeing his picture in the papers that he isn't worth much to his department, which cherishes a notion that secret service should have something secret about it.

After all these weeks of triumph, Fanny Brice just got around to explaining where she got the idea of Baby Snooks. It seems that when Fanny was a little girl she longed to play Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and no one would give her a chance. Baby Snooks is her idea of a white Topsy.

When Robert Taylor isn't actually before the microphone during the "Good News" program, he is sitting just off-stage talking to Barbara Stanwick. Since she has become a regular visitor to the broadcasts, two chairs are placed in this spot every week.

ODDS AND ENDS—Unlike most actors, Bob Burns doesn't spend his spare time going to pictures to see what his competitors are doing. He saw only three pictures last year, all sad ones, and he hasn't seen any yet this year. . . . Andrea Leeds and Janet Gaynor look so much alike in real life that they love to stand in front of a mirror together and make faces, seeing if the resemblance still holds true through laughter, tears, and grimaces. It does. . . . With Margaret Shanna at the piano, and other cast members playing drums, xylophone, and trombone, the "Arnold Grimm's Daughter" company holds a daily singing concert to relax between rehearsal and broadcast.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses CARBOHYDRATES and FATS

Foods That Provide Motive Power For the Body Machinery

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th St. New York.

THE human body might be compared to a framework filled with machinery. It takes food to build the framework, food to run the machinery and food to keep it working efficiently and this food must be of the proper type.

Last week, I discussed the body building proteins and explained how to distinguish between those which build and repair body tissue, and those which are adequate for maintenance, but not for growth. It is equally important that you should learn something of the fuel foods which are necessary to fire the body engine and furnish motive power to propel the body machinery.

Fuel Foods Keep Us Alive

The body could not function in the absence of fuel foods any more than a machine could run without power, or a car without gas. Every breath requires an expenditure of energy, and so does every movement—from the beating of the heart to the winking of an eye. Even in repose, the body machinery is kept functioning only by an ever-present supply of fuel. For, as long as life continues—even when you are lying perfectly still—you need fuel to carry on the internal work of the body.

Activity Demands Energy Foods

Every type of daily activity, including work and exercise, requires additional fuel. If you walk slowly, you expend twice as much energy as when you sit still. And when you walk fast, you may use up four, five or six times as much energy.

The chief fuel, or energy producing foods, are the carbohydrates—that is, the starches and sugars; and fats. Protein also has some fuel value, but its primary function is to build and repair tissue.

Carbohydrates are quick burning. Fat, on the other hand, burns slowly, like a lamp whose wick is turned low.

Danger of Inadequate Fuel Supply

Recently there has been a tendency to minimize the importance of the fats and carbohydrates, due to the craze for dieting. Some of the results of disregarding the absolute necessity for these foods are extreme irritability, and a greater susceptibility to fatigue, nervous diseases, tuberculosis and other infections.

Too Much Fuel Causes Overweight

It is true, however, that an excess of fuel foods will tend to produce overweight. For if we assimilate them, and do not utilize their potential energy in muscular effort, they will be stored—as fat—usually in most inconvenient locations! On the other hand, an excess of any food is a detriment. Therefore the goal should be enough, but not too much, of all necessary foods.

Since both carbohydrates and fats are energy foods, one might expect them to play an interchangeable role in the diet. To a certain extent, they do, although fat, being more concentrated, provides two and one-fourth times as much fuel value as an equal weight of carbohydrate.

But because of the variation in the way these materials are handled by the body, it is generally considered that health is best served when 40 to 50 per cent of the total energy value of foods is provided in the form of carbohydrate and 30 to 35 per cent in the form of fats.

Carbohydrates Are Quickest Fuel

Carbohydrates, which originate chiefly in plant life, are readily converted into heat and muscle energy. Foods rich in carbohydrates include bread, potatoes, macaroni, rice, cooked and ready-to-eat cereals, peanuts, dried and preserved fruits, sugars and syrup.

Sugar furnishes heat more quickly and more abundantly than any other food. But it has a tendency to dull the appetite and is also apt to cause fermentation. Therefore, a large measure of our heat and energy is best secured from starchy foods such as bread, cereals, macaroni and potatoes.

Quick energy can also be obtained from the easily digested sugars of fresh and dried fruits, such as prunes, apricots, raisins and fully ripened bananas.

Here is an interesting and important point which is frequently overlooked in unscientific reducing diets. Fat requires carbohydrates for its proper utilization by the body. That is why women who try to reduce without following a scientifically planned diet frequently become seriously ill as a result of cutting down on carbohydrates while overlooking the fats contained in milk, butter, and other foods.

Relation of Fat To Health

Fats are so necessary to the body economy that it is no exaggeration to say that without fat, life, in its higher forms, possible. The noted explorer, Stefansson, found that a diet consisting of all-meat diet, provided he ate a lot of fat. On a diet of meat, he became violent within a week.

Besides furnishing concentrated energy values, fats help to the fatty tissue which of the nerves and abdominal and forms the pleasing of face and figure.

Because it leaves the stomach more slowly than protein, carbohydrates, fat retards digestion of these food groups, what, and thus gives staying to a meal. At the same promotes the flow of pancreatic juice and bile, thus helping assimilation of other foods, rich in fat include butter, egg yolk, cooking fats, margarine, olives, pastry, butter, most nuts except chestnuts and lichi nuts, various sausage and fried foods.

Anger Destroys Fat Reserves

Experiments have demonstrated why nervous, irritable individuals are usually thin, while those with a serene temperament accumulate weight. It has been proven that anger and frustration increase the amount of fat burned and remove a corresponding amount of fat from its usual place beneath the skin. Anger may take off more than an hour's exercise, or three days of enforced diet.

But whether the members of a family are good natured, or young or old, they need a constant supply of fuel foods—at every meal. Fuel foods produce energy is the motive power of work and thought.

New Slenderizing Dresses

IF YOU'RE in the size-34-and-up class, here are three brand new fashions designed especially for you! Everyone of them is extremely smart and everyone is designed to give added charm and dignity to full figures. They are easy to make. The patterns are carefully planned to help beginners, and each is accompanied by a detailed sew chart. So start in tomorrow, and have at least two of them ready for Easter.

Princess House Dress.

It's a sure way to start the day right, having a dress as becoming and pretty as this one to put on first thing in the morning. It takes a woman with some plumpness to do justice to that fitted, long line. Made up in printed percale, gingham or chambray, with rows of ricrac braid, this dress will be so successful that you'll use the pattern time and again.

Graceful Afternoon Frock.

An especially charming style for luncheons, bridge parties and club meetings. The full sleeves make your arms look small, and are very graceful in themselves. Gathers at the shoulders create necessary bust fullness. Make this dress for now in silk print or chiffon. Later on, in voile or summer sheer it will be your coolest dress.

Dress With Lengthening Panels.

The plain neckline, the slim waist, snugged in by gathers, the long panel, front and back, are all beautifully slimming in effect. All in all, this dress is so smart that it's certain to be one of your favorites. This design adapts itself to so many materials—silk crepe, small-figured silk print and, later on, linen.

The Patterns.

1485 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48. Size 36 requires 4 1/2 yards of 39-inch material, with 3 1/2 yards of braid for trimming.

1233 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 36 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39-inch material.

1482 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44. Size 34 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, with short sleeves. With long sleeves, 4 1/2 yards.

Qualities of Poor Furniture Polish

How often a houseful of fine furniture and handsome woodwork is spoiled by the use of a poor furniture polish! There are many polishes on the market today—some fair, some good, others excellent for luster and long life of the finish! The best is non-greasy, because made with a fine, light-oil base! In time, furniture and woodwork can be ruined by the persistent application of a cheap, poor polish! Such polish will contain kerosene, harsh abrasives and harmful acids—destructive elements, that are unseen and unsuspected! The housewife may use one of these polishes, feeling that she is economically keeping her furniture polished—but this is poorest economy, if she values her furniture (and what housewife does not?). The furniture in a home constitutes the largest part of the furnishings—and will show up like "sore thumbs" when dried out, cracked or checked. This is just what occurs, when other than a reputable oil polish is used! Too, a quality oil polish is less expensive! Less is used at one time—for it's undiluted. The resultant glow is deeper, richer, more lasting! Best of all, the finish of the furniture and woodwork is properly "fed" and kept in prime condition! So beware of harsh, "bargain" polishes—for through them, the furniture suffers!

Observers in Washington know that he is pretty much disgusted by the refusal of the President to be guided by advice from the party's national chairman. It is possible, of course, that Mr. Farley will prefer to continue in the job as postmaster general and be quiet rather than expose the rupture. I understand he is giving that matter considerable thought these days, because, first of all, Mr. Farley believes in playing practical politics up to the hilt.

There is another rumor running around Washington about Mr. Farley. It is said in many places that Mr. Farley may decide to remain on the job so that he can be more effective in helping to restore control of the Democratic party machinery to the Democrats. That is to say, Mr. Farley knows, as every one else who understands politics knows, that the New Deal theories will fall of their own weight in due time. They will fall because so many of them are contrary to human nature and to American traditions. Being immensely practical, Mr. Farley holds that the Democratic party is a party which is a natural opposition group to the Republicans. It will live, as it ought to live, and will continue to be a factor in American government long after the New Deal has burned itself out. Mr. Farley, therefore, is anxious to lend a hand in rebuilding the Democratic party for the Democrats.

To that end, it is understood by many observers, there is a likely alignment between Mr. Farley and the canny, politically wise, "Cactus Jack" Garner, the Vice President.

Undoubtedly, there is a strong and growing group in the house and senate which has turned away from the President. Recent votes have shown an increasing number of Democrats that are willing to stand on their own bottom. A very recent illustration of this was the vote on the New Deal scheme to tax corporations owned by a small number of persons at a higher rate than those whose shares are widely owned. There are thousands of these, all small corporations. To have kept that provision in the new tax bill would have saved the face of a small coterie of presidential advisers and even the President, himself. But half of the Democrats joined with the Republicans to kill off the plan.

From this and other circumstances, it is plain to see how the rumored Farley-Garner alignment would be backed up by such political powers as Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi. Senator Harrison, it will be remembered, was rewarded for carrying New Deal buckets by having the President urge selection of Senator "Dear Alben" Barkley, of Kentucky, to be Democratic leader of the senate. Senator Barkley since has run into a fight for renomination in his own state. Senator Harrison is said to have a following of thirty-odd or more senators.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio
By VIRGINIA VALE

JUDY GARLAND, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's wonder girl, will be starred in "The Wizard of Oz" and that is just the first of many fairy-tale pictures that you may expect to see in the next year.

Ever since "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" started its record-breaking runs, motion-picture producers have been wondering if a fairy tale with human actors wouldn't be a good bet. All the companies are looking for fairy tales, and as fast as they find them, all the younger stars from Shirley Temple to Deanna Durbin will be put to work in them.

Considering what has happened to other operatic songbirds in pictures, sudden stardom and then a complete loss of interest by the studios, Helen Jepson is very happy that she plays a fairly small part in "The Goldwyn Follies." She thinks that her career in pictures will probably last a long time if she doesn't want to be the whole show. She would like a chance to see some of the scenes that were cut out of "The Follies" though. There was one where she really looked like herself, no wig, no special make-up, and her favorite dress. There was another where Bobby Clark dropped her kerplunk on the floor.

Reports of "Merrily We Live" in which Brian Aherne co-stars with Constance Bennett were so good that the Hal Roach studio immediately wired to New York where he was vacationing and urged him to return at once. His new picture is to be "There Goes My Heart" and when he left a lot of young New York actresses said that the title expressed just what they felt.

"Arsene Lupin Returns" is a delightful and gripping jewel-thief mystery, played with great skill by Melvyn Douglas, Warren William, and Virginia Bruce. William's part, though not as large as the others, is a memorable one, for he plays a G-man who so relishes seeing his picture in the papers that he isn't worth much to his department, which cherishes a notion that secret service should have something secret about it.

After all these weeks of triumph, Fanny Brice just got around to explaining where she got the idea of Baby Snooks. It seems that when Fanny was a little girl she longed to play Topsy in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" and no one would give her a chance. Baby Snooks is her idea of a white Topsy.

When Robert Taylor isn't actually before the microphone during the "Good News" program, he is sitting just off-stage talking to Barbara Stanwick. Since she has become a regular visitor to the broadcasts, two chairs are placed in this spot every week.

ODDS AND ENDS—Unlike most actors, Bob Burns doesn't spend his spare time going to pictures to see what his competitors are doing. He saw only three pictures last year, all sad ones, and he hasn't seen any yet this year. . . . Andrea Leeds and Janet Gaynor look so much alike in real life that they love to stand in front of a mirror together and make faces, seeing if the resemblance still holds true through laughter, tears, and grimaces. It does. . . . With Margaret Shanna at the piano, and other cast members playing drums, xylophone, and trombone, the "Arnold Grimm's Daughter" company holds a daily singing concert to relax between rehearsal and broadcast.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses CARBOHYDRATES and FATS

Foods That Provide Motive Power For the Body Machinery

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
8 East 39th St. New York.

THE human body might be compared to a framework filled with machinery. It takes food to build the framework, food to run the machinery and food to keep it working efficiently and this food must be of the proper type.

Last week, I discussed the body building proteins and explained how to distinguish between those which build and repair body tissue, and those which are adequate for maintenance, but not for growth. It is equally important that you should learn something of the fuel foods which are necessary to fire the body engine and furnish motive power to propel the body machinery.

Fuel Foods Keep Us Alive

The body could not function in the absence of fuel foods any more than a machine could run without power, or a car without gas. Every breath requires an expenditure of energy, and so does every movement—from the beating of the heart to the winking of an eye. Even in repose, the body machinery is kept functioning only by an ever-present supply of fuel. For, as long as life continues—even when you are lying perfectly still—you need fuel to carry on the internal work of the body.

Activity Demands Energy Foods
Every type of daily activity, including work and exercise, requires additional fuel. If you walk slowly, you expend twice as much energy as when you sit still. And when you walk fast, you may use up four, five or six times as much energy.

The chief fuel, or energy producing foods, are the carbohydrates—that is, the starches and sugars; and fats. Protein also has some fuel value, but its primary function is to build and repair tissue.

Carbohydrates are quick burning. Fat, on the other hand, burns slowly, like a lamp whose wick is turned low.

Danger of Inadequate Fuel Supply

Recently there has been a tendency to minimize the importance of the fats and carbohydrates, due to the craze for dieting. Some of the results of disregarding the absolute necessity for these foods are extreme irritability, and a greater susceptibility to fatigue, nervous diseases, tuberculosis and other infections.

Too Much Fuel Causes Overweight

It is true, however, that an excess of fuel foods will tend to produce overweight. For if we assimilate them, and do not utilize their potential energy in muscular effort, they will be stored—as fat—usually in most inconvenient locations! On the other hand, an excess of any food is a detriment. Therefore the goal should be enough, but not too much, of all necessary foods.

Since both carbohydrates and fats are energy foods, one might expect them to play an interchangeable role in the diet. To a certain extent, they do, although fat, being more concentrated, provides two and one-fourth times as much fuel value as an equal weight of carbohydrate.

But because of the variation in the way these materials are handled by the body, it is generally considered that health is best served when 40 to 50 per cent of the total energy value of foods is provided in the form of carbohydrate and 30 to 35 per cent in the form of fats.

Carbohydrates Are Quickest Fuel

Carbohydrates, which originate chiefly in plant life, are readily converted into heat and muscle energy. Foods rich in carbohydrates include bread, potatoes, macaroni, rice, cooked and ready-to-eat cereals, peanuts, dried and preserved fruits, sugars and syrup.

Sugar furnishes heat more quickly and more abundantly than any other food. But it has a tendency to dull the appetite and is also apt to cause fermentation. Therefore, a large measure of our heat and energy is best secured from starchy foods such as bread, cereals, macaroni and potatoes.

Quick energy can also be obtained from the easily digested sugars of fresh and dried fruits, such as prunes, apricots, raisins and fully ripened bananas.

Here is an interesting and important point which is frequently overlooked in unscientific reducing diets. Fat requires carbohydrates for its proper utilization by the body. That is why women who try to reduce without following a scientifically planned diet frequently become seriously ill as a result of cutting down on carbohydrates while overlooking the fats contained in milk, butter, and other foods.

Relation of Fat To Health

Fats are so necessary to the body economy that it is no exaggeration to say that without fat, life, in its higher forms, is impossible. The noted explorer, Stefansson, found that a diet consisting of all-meat diet, provided he ate a lot of fat. On a diet of meat, he became violent within a week.

Besides furnishing concentrated energy values, fats help to the fatty tissue which covers the nerves and abdominal organs and forms the pleasing contour of face and figure.

Because it leaves the system more slowly than proteins, carbohydrates, fat retards the digestion of these food groups, and thus gives staying power to a meal. At the same time, it promotes the flow of pancreatic juice and bile, thus helping assimilation of other foods. Rich in fat include butter, egg yolk, cooking fats and margarine, olives, pastry, butter, most nuts except chestnuts and lichi nuts, various sausages and dried foods.

Anger Destroys Fat Reserves

Experiments have demonstrated why nervous, irritable individuals are usually thin, while those with a serene temperament accumulate weight. It has been proven that anger and frustration increase the amount of fat in the blood and remove a corresponding amount of fat from its usual storage place beneath the skin. Anger may take off more than an hour's exercise, or three days of enforced diet.

But whether the members of a family are good natured, or young or old, they need a constant supply of fuel foods—at every meal. Fuel foods produce energy, and energy is the motive power of work and thought.

Austrian Youths Celebrate Hitler Coup

International News Radlphoto.
A contingent of the Hitler Youth Organization of Austria are shown parading through the streets of Vienna in celebration of the Nazis' triumphant march into Austria. The successful Nazi coup spelled the end of Austria's existence as a nation and its beginning as a state of the German reich.

"The Law" in Austria Today

German anti-aircraft machine gunners and thousands of others are enforcing Germany's will on Austria now, since that country became a part of the German reich in Hitler's bloodless coup. When this photograph was made these gunners were merely playing at war in the forests at Kissingen, Germany.

NAZI ARMY CHIEF

Field Marshal Herman Wilhelm Goering, under whose direction the plans for the Nazification of Austria were successfully completed. Addressing an audience in Berlin following the coup, he declared that Germany is determined further to increase her army.

Czechoslovakia May Be Next

With informed observers predicting that Czechoslovakia will be the next object of Adolf Hitler's Pan-German campaign, following his bloodless subjugation of Austria, the government of Czechoslovakia has reiterated its previous warning that it will resist to the last any attempt to conquer it. President Edouard Benes (center) is shown conferring with some of his military chiefs during army maneuvers recently.

New Slenderizing Dresses

IF YOU'RE in the size-34-and-up class, here are three brand new fashions designed especially for you! Everyone of them is extremely smart and everyone is designed to give added charm and dignity to full figures. They are easy to make. The patterns are carefully planned to help beginners, and each is accompanied by a detailed sew chart. So start in tomorrow, and have at least two of them ready for Easter.

Princess House Dress.

It's a sure way to start the day right, having a dress as becoming and pretty as this one to put on first thing in the morning. It takes a woman with some plumpness to do justice to that fitted, long line. Made up in printed percale, gingham or chambray, with rows of ricrac braid, this dress will be so successful that you'll use the pattern time and again.

Graceful Afternoon Frock.

An especially charming style for luncheons, bridge parties and club meetings. The full sleeves make your arms look small, and are very graceful in themselves. Gathers at the shoulders create necessary bust fullness. Make this dress for now in silk print or chiffon. Later on, in voile or summer sheer it will be your coolest dress.

Dress With Lengthening Panels.

The plain neckline, the slim waist, snugged in by gathers, the long panel, front and back, are all beautifully slimming in effect. All in all, this dress is so smart that it's certain to be one of your favorites. This design adapts itself to so many materials—silk crepe, small-figured silk print and, later on, linen.

The Patterns.

1485 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material, with 3½ yards of braid for trimming.

1233 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 36 requires 5½ yards of 39-inch material.

1482 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44. Size 34 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, with short sleeves. With long sleeves, 4½ yards.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart which enables even a beginner to cut and make her own clothes.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Roads of All Kinds

"Sweetest road I've ever driven!" exclaims the motorist over a certain stretch of highway in the province of Mysore, India.

What's more, he's technically correct, for, mixed with the surface soil is molasses. It helps pack dirt, sheds rain, curbs dust.

Germany goes India one better. It uses powdered aluminum on some of its highways. Result: Smoother riding and, at night, a much lighter and safer roadway. The aluminum particles reflect rays of light from oncoming automobile headlights.

Easter Egg Hunt For The Kiddies In Community

CIVIC CLUB SPONSORS SOMETHING NEW FOR CHILDREN HERE

Colored Eggs, Prizes For Children
Of This Community
April 16th

Plans are being worked out by a special committee appointed by the Civic Club to stage a big Easter Egg Hunt for the children of Klemme and vicinity. The big event is scheduled to take place sometime Saturday afternoon, April 16th and all children up to a certain age in Klemme and the surrounding country will take part.

Eggs, provided by Klemme business and professional people, will be colored by the Girl Scouts and hidden about town. At a given signal the children will dash out to find the eggs. Plain eggs, marked with the business man's name, will be prize eggs, and the finders will turn them in for the prizes offered.

Watch for complete details in the Times next week, and all you little kiddies be sure to be in Klemme for the big Easter Egg Hunt. There will be colored eggs for every child, so none will be disappointed.

Watch for the Easter Egg Hunt in Klemme, Saturday, April 16th!

REFORMED CHURCH GROUP TO GIVE EASTER CANTATA

The Mixed Chorus of the Klemme Reformed Church will sing the Cantata "The Crucifixion," Wednesday evening, April 13th. The Chorus numbers about 60 members and is under the leadership of Martin Elstad.

Two guest soloists will appear on the program. Mr. Harold E. Ellickson, Decorah, tenor soloist, has travelled from coast to coast both as a member of a lyceum quartet and as a radio entertainer. In 1934 he had a six weeks engagement at the Century of Progress in Chicago. Mr. Ellickson will be the main soloist of the evening.

ELEVEN TO BE CONFIRMED AT REFORMED CHURCH

A class of eleven will be confirmed at the Klemme Reformed Church during the Easter season. The members of the class are: Frederick Bell, Allen Barz, Elsie Thiemann, Irene Becker, Louise Albers, Doris Ruben, Adela Wille, Dorothy Baack, Arlene Schmidt, Marie Schmidt and Gertrude Grosshuesch.

The class will be examined before the congregation on Palm Sunday (April 10th), confirmation services will be held on Good Friday (April 15th) and on Easter Sunday the confirmation class will celebrate the Lord's supper with the congregation.

FISHING LAWS ARE BEING DISTRIBUTED

With every fishing license sold in Iowa this year will be a complete text of the fishing laws. Fishermen are asked to keep a record of their season's catch on the reverse side of the leaflet, and report it to the Conservation Commission at the close of the season.

BALMY SPRING WEATHER
JOLTED THIS MORNING

Spring came to a sudden halt when snow began falling over Iowa Tuesday night. This Wednesday morning there is at least six inches of wet snow on the ground, and still snowing.

KLEMME STORES TO BE OPEN ON WED-NESDAY NIGHTS

Beginning next week, April 13th, the Klemme stores will remain open on each Wednesday and Saturday night for the balance of the season.

During the winter months the stores have kept open shop on Saturday night only, but hereafter you can shop on two nights, Wednesday and Saturday.

KLEMME CREAMERY BROKEN INTO FRIDAY NIGHT, SMALL AMOUNT OF CASH TAKEN

Thieves entered the office of the Klemme Creamery Friday night by jimmying the door and breaking out the glass to unlatch the lock. A number of checks, made out to farmers for cream, were taken as well as a small amount of cash, about $1.50.

Manager Paul Mueller notified Sheriff Brower, Saturday morning. Sheriff Brower and his deputy, Elmer Katter, made a thorough investigation and obtained some valuable clues which may lead to the arrest of the thieves.

LEWIS RADIO SHOP MOVES INTO NEW LOCATION THIS WEEK

"Stub" Lewis, proprietor of the Lewis Radio Shop, has leased the first floor rooms in the State Bank Building and is this week moving his stock and equipment into the new quarters.

The rooms, located at the rear of the Post Office, are being redecorated. The new location will give Mr. Lewis much needed display room and also ample space for radio repairing.

MASONS WILL OBSERVE
150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CONSTITUTION

A proclamation has just been received by the local Masonic lodge from the Grand Master of Masons in Iowa, Harry A. Palmer of Cedar Rapids, calling all Masons to assemble in state-wide meetings in their respective lodge halls on Tuesday evening, April 12, for the purpose of fittingly celebrating the 150th anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States.

This is in conformance with action of the Grand Lodge last June, in voting to cooperate with the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission, created in 1935 by act of Congress. September 17 last was the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution; June 21 of this year will mark a similar anniversary of the ratification of the necessary ninth state (New Hampshire); and April 30, 1939, will be the 150th anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington, first President; three tremendously important dates in our history.

Luverne Wetterling, Master of the lodge, reports that an extensive program has been arranged, and a record-breaking attendance and a confidently expected. A feed and good time will follow the meeting. This will be something different than what has ever been tried in lodge. Come and enjoy a good time.

The presence of all eligible Masons in the community is invited, whether members of the local or not.

Mr. and Mrs. Riehm Retired From County Home Supervision

NEWLY APPOINTED STEW-ARD AND STEWARDESS
AT COUNTY FARM

Mr. and Mrs. Jake Steil To Be In Charge Of Hancock Institution

GARNER—Mr. and Mrs. Jake N. Steil, newly appointed steward and stewardess of the Hancock county farm, took possession Saturday. Residents of Hancock county from childhood they lived in Garner until several years ago when they purchased a farm adjoining Britt which they rented out following an accident in which Mr. Steil lost both of his hands in a cornpicker last November.

They have two sons, Orville of Garner, employed in the C. H. Schissel store and Elwyn. They have one grandchild, son of Mr. and Mrs. Orville Steil.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Riehm, whom they succeed, have completed 19 years of management of the Hancock county farm and retired, moving to Garner, Saturday.

into a Colonial bungalow recently completed in East Garner. Seven inmates who were there when they took charge on April 1, 1919, are still living in the home.

During the time the Riehms were in charge there was an average of 32 inmates a year.

Surprise Party Held Monday Eve

A surprise birthday party, honoring Mr. and Mrs. Quentin Stille was held at their home Monday evening. Five hundred was played at four tables. High prize was given to Mrs. Howard Spittler and low to Kermit Stille.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. John Carothers, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Jones, Mr. and Mrs. A. Q. Lade and daughter, all of Garner; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Spittler and family, Mr. and Mrs. Kermit Stille and sons, Mr. and Mrs. Ned Howard and sons, Lucille Stille, Cecil Bridges and John Ward, all of Klemme.

Mr. and Mrs. Stille received a beautiful black and chromium clock. Lunch was served by the guests.

Klemme School Musicians Will Make First Public Appearance

MUSIC DEPARTMENT OF K.H.S. TO GIVE PROGRAM

Will Be First Home Appearance Of The Year

The music department of the public school, under the direction of Martin K. Elstad, will give an evening concert and entertainment at the school gymnasium Friday night of this week at eight o'clock. This will be the first local public appearance of our musicians this year.

The program will start with a band concert. This will be followed by a group of the special numbers used in recent music contests. Two more band numbers will conclude the concert.

There are two reasons for putting on this program. In the first place it will give the public a chance to hear the music that has been in preparation all year. In the second place the small admission charge of 10c and 15c will help make up the expense of entering our students in the music contests at Belmond and Britt.

Following is the program:

"National Emblem March" (Band) Bagley; "Saskatchewan Overture" (Band) G. E. Holmes; "Tranquility" (Cornet solo with Band Acc.) Dorrance Grange, Soloist) Geo. D. Barnard; "Grandiose Overture" (Band) E. De Lamater; "Al and Hal" (Trombone-Cornet Duet Band Acc., Elsie Ward, Trombone and Allen Barz, Cornet) Harold Bennett; "First Aire Varie" (Violin Solo, Jacqueline Kudje, Soloist, Mrs. A. J. Kudje Accompanist) Dancla; "From Day To Day" (Trombone Solo, Elaine Buntenbach, Soloist, Mrs. E. G. Schaeffer, Accompanist) Clay Smith; "In Silent Night" (A Suabian Folk Song by the Girls' Glee Club); "Victor Herbert's Favorites" (Band Selection) Victor Herbert; "Raleigh March" (Band) J. J. Richards.

TRUSTEES TO BEAUTIFY LOCAL CEMETERY

At the meeting of the Ell Township Trustees, Monday, plans were made to beautify the local cemetery. A number of the old trees will be taken out and beautiful evergreens will take their place.

Summer Projects Outlined At Meeting Of Civic Club

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I am renting two farms on shares from two different landlords. The one does not care to comply with the Program. If I plant less than my corn allotment on the one farm will that take care of my over-planting on the other?

A. No Performance will be checked on each farm from which you are receiving a share of the crop in 1938 and each farm must comply with its own allotment of both corn and general soil-depleting crops.

Q. I am operating a farm which I have operated as one farm for 5 years and am rotating the crops without regard to ownership. I own 80 acres of this farm myself. My sister owns the other 80 acres, and I am paying her a share of the crops for rent. Will performance be checked on this whole farm or must I comply with my corn allotment on that portion which belongs to my sister and also that portion of the farm which belongs to me?

A. This may be considered as one farm if you and your sister make a written request to the county committee and the county committee determines that this has been considered as one farm in the past. In this event you may plant the corn on whichever tract you care to and performance will be checked on the whole 160 acres and not on each 80 acres separately.

Q. I own one farm and rent another farm for cash, operating the two tracts of land as one farming unit. Will I be required to stay within my corn allotment on each tract separately or can I make compliance as though this was all one farm as I did in 1937?

A. The county committee will assign an allotment of corn and total soil-depleting crops on each of these tracts. However, since you are receiving all of the crops grown on both of these farms, performance will be checked as though they were one farm if you make a written request and the county committee chairman determines that it has been operated in the past as one farm and approves the consolidation.

Q. I own one farm and this spring I have field-rented 40 acres from my neighbor to raise corn. For the purpose of compliance in the 1938 Program will this 40 acres become a part of my farm?

A. Since this is a field-rented tract of land, it will still remain a part of your neighbor's farm and performance will be determined upon your neighbor's farm, including the 40 acres which you have field-rented. If the corn allotments on your neighbor's farm, including the 40 acres you are field-renting, are exceeded you will be held liable for your proportionate share of the over-planting.

Q. If I sow Hubam on a field without a nurse crop and harvest the Hubam this fall for seed, will it be considered depleting or non-depleting?

A. You may harvest seed from any of the conserving crops and the land will still be considered non-depleting.

Q. If volunteer crops grow on my farm in 1938 and I harvest them, how will they be classified?

A. They will be classified just as though they had been seeded.

Q. If I plant sweet sorghum and

SEVENTY-FIVE ATTENDED QUARTERLY MEETING OF KLEMME CIVIC CLUB

Projects For The Summer Discussed And Committees Appointed

The first quarterly meeting and banquet of 1938, held by the Klemme Civic Club, Thursday night at the school gymnasium, was a very successful affair. Approximately seventy-five people were served by the Ladies Aid of the Methodist Church, who prepared the dinner.

The program consisted of community singing led by Martin Elstad; saxophone solos by Carmen Kluckhohn, accompanied by Elaine Buntenbach; short talks by Supl. Galbreth, who acted as toastmaster, Coach A. L. Kingery and the members of the basketball squad, in whose honor the banquet was staged.

Al Mitchell, sports editor of the Globe-Gazette, was the principal speaker of the evening and he gave a very inspiring talk and complimented the squad on the championship victories.

President W. C. Keraus presented a number of projects to be planned for the coming summer and appointed committees to carry out details. Among the activities planned were Memorial day, summer entertainment, better residential and business lighting, lighting of the highway leading into Klemme and the erection of lighted signs at the junction west of town.

Mr. Corey and Mr. Stover, of the Central States Electric Co. were present and presented plans for the lighting projects which could be installed with no additional expense to the tax-payers of Klemme.

Another project discussed was an Easter Egg Hunt which is described elsewhere in this issue.

The Civic Club now boasts a membership of over sixty business and professional people of Klemme, whose main object is to make Klemme a better town in which to live.

Offer Slogan Prize

A slogan for Klemme is wanted by one committee and a cash prize will be awarded to the person who submits the best slogan. More details on this will be published later. In the meantime, take a tip, start writing your slogan now. Make it short, the shorter the better and perhaps not over four or six words in all. This contest will be open to everyone in this community. Watch for details.

KLEMME FIRE COMPANY HELD ELECTION OF OFFICERS ON FRIDAY

At their meeting last Friday evening the Klemme Volunteer Fire Department held an election of officers.

John Etchen was named president, George Lawhorn, vice-president and Carl Anderson, secretary and treasurer. Martin Brinkman is Fire Chief and his assistant is Fred Bell.

The Department is working out plans for the purchase of a new fire truck which is a real necessity and they should be given full support in their campaign to raise the needed funds.

harvest the sweet sorghum for fodder after the seed has matured will it be soil-depleting or non-depleting?

A. C'veet sorghums are soil-depleting if the crop matures as grain or seed even though it may be used as fodder.

Taxation Problem

Washington.—It is often the trick of political spokesmen to let their real feelings become known by a statement that makes no definite reference to the broader policies in which they are interested. Such a statement was that made lately by Sen. Pat Harrison, Mississippi Democrat, with reference to what the senate will do on the pending tax bill. At least, nearly all of the observers here who know the lovable Pat Harrison were quite convinced that, when he said the senate would grant business relief from unfair taxes, he actually was proclaiming congressional independence of President Roosevelt.

This question of taxation is one with which the New Dealers are gravely concerned; they are just as much concerned as is business and the country as a whole. But they are concerned for a different reason. Sane minds throughout the country long ago began to beg congress and the administration to make changes in the tax laws to permit business to go forward with employment and production. New Dealers attacked anyone who said that as an "economic royalist" or "tory" or some other one of the various things that the New Dealers profess to hate. After so long a time, however, the New Dealers conceded some changes were necessary—and then began the greatest face-saving maneuvers yet to be tried by the wishful thinkers.

When word went to the house ways and means committee that it could make modifications in the two pet New Deal tax laws, the ageing Chairman Doughton, of that committee, followed instructions. Of course, there were seventeen Democrats and seven Republicans on the committee and that enabled the New Deal to carry out its plans for "modification" of tax laws—and to save faces. Regular Democrats and Republicans in the committee membership still were in the minority in the house of representatives, and the New Dealers had their way. The tax bill debate in the house nevertheless told of more slaps at the administration that lay ahead.

At this point in the developments, Senator Harrison enters upon the stage. He is chairman of the senate committee on finance. His statement, therefore, that the 1938 tax bill is going to give some basis upon which business can break even, at least, can be taken as indicative of the final form of that law when it emerges from congress. The house, under the lash of White House lobbyists, managed to hold part of the ways and means committee draft in its original shape while losing other parts of it. Thus, when the senate has acted and the bill is sent to conference committees for adjustment of the differences, it is rather plain to see how Democrats and Republicans are certain to override New Deal face-saving.

I have written much in these columns about present tax policies heretofore. There is little need to repeat the facts which continue to be important factors in the development of the Roosevelt depression. The assinine tax on undistributed earnings, fathered by the radical Prof. Herman Oliphant of the Treasury staff, has not allowed any corporation to build up a reserve. It took all of the earnings of last year, a period in which some corporations did make money in a limited way. Now that the depression is on us again, corporations obviously are scared stiff. Wage cuts are cropping up here, there and everywhere, and every time there is a wage cut the nation's buying power is reduced to that extent. But what is an employer going to do? Go broke, in order to keep his payrolls up? That is hardly human, it seems to me, since everyone desires to protect whatever funds he may have, be it a dollar or a million.

So, when Senator Harrison spoke out boldly that something was going to be done to eliminate some of the obstacles which wishful thinking New Dealers have built up in their experimentation, it means, I believe, that Senator Harrison proposes to do just that. The politics of the situation is another matter. That phase is equally important and significant. Senator Harrison would not have spoken out a few years ago, or even a year ago, as he has done lately. The house a year ago would never have rejected what has been called the "third basket" of taxation. (The so-called third basket was a new type of tax that would have made the rates sky-high on corporations held by only a few stockholders, family-owned corporations like thousands of small companies usually are.) No, the house would not have killed that a year ago, but it did this year. And, when Senator Harrison dared to say congress will do thus and so, Senator Harrison was simply voicing a fact. He was saying, in effect, "Whether you like it or not, Mr. President, we will write the tax law in the interest of the country as we see it."

In the course of the tax bill debate in the house, there was a curious disclosure, a rather biting piece of debate. Representative Treadway, who would be chairman of the ways and means committee if Republicans were in the majority instead of being only a handful, told the house that the father of the surplus earnings tax had never come before the committee since the time he laid out the silly scheme which led to its enactment. Professor Oliphant has been so silent about his sponsorship of the plan that it has become almost thunderous. And Mr. Treadway thought it was unusual that a parent should shrink from acknowledgment of parenthood. He obtained no answer or explanation. The surplus earnings tax, in a modified form, was still in the bill as reported to the house, however, and there was sufficient New Deal strength in the house to hold it there. It will be different in the senate, and the speech by Senator Harrison simply is an announcement in advance.

It has been interesting to me to review these facts because I am inclining to the opinion that the situation in congress is more or less a reflection of the opinion in the entire country. The November elections lie ahead. Mail from home is pouring in, and the character of that mail is always closely studied by the politician seeking re-election.

That is to say, the average house member or senator is keeping very close tab on what the feeling is back home. They were not put to that necessity during the first four years of Mr. Roosevelt's administration. All that was needed was for a member to say that the President wants this or that, and vote that way.

So clearly has all of this been made apparent that few who so desire are afraid any longer to assert themselves—to say what they think even if that is in administration opposition. It is a healthy sign. It means that congress, while going along with Mr. Roosevelt many times, will put more and more checks on his proposals that have had their birth in the little red house, of Georgetown's section of Washington, where all of the New Dealers congregate. It means further—in the opinion of some of the real Democrats—that the New Deal has played out. They are, therefore, getting back into their harness as Democratic leaders.

And, in this light, there has been another development that should not be overlooked. I refer to the collapse of Robert H. Jackson's candidacy for governor of New York. When Mr. Jackson, who lately was made solicitor general of the United States, was "going to town" as the expression is, left wing press agents had him all but elected in New York. A big banquet was tendered him in New York city. Mr. Roosevelt was quite instrumental in that banquet plan. He lent aid in stirring up attendance. It was notable, however, that the banquet created no excitement. That is, there was no excitement of importance, and just there the candidacy began to sag.

I do not know what the real reason was for Mr. Jackson's subsequent statement that he would not seek the New York governorship. It is just possible, however, that the absence of Postmaster General Farley from the banquet sponsorship had something to do with the flop—for flop the dinner and candidacy surely did. Now, everyone around Washington knows that Mr. Roosevelt no longer takes the postmaster general into the executive confidence, even though Mr. Farley is chairman of the Democratic national committee. Indeed, it was printed in several widely read columns that Mr. Roosevelt actually distrusted Mr. Farley. I would not be able to report on that detail, but I can not overlook the fact that left wingers, especially the long-haired group, have been sniping at Mr. Farley for months. It is just possible, then, that they have persuaded Mr. Roosevelt to the point of conviction. He has listened to that group a very great deal and they may have made him feel that Mr. Farley is undermining the President.

In any event, one may follow the tax pronouncement by Senator Harrison, right on through the significant silence of Mr. Farley. One may find how Mr. Farley has had numerous and sundry conferences, or chance meetings, with a good many powerful old-line Democrats. But to examine the thing from a congressional angle again, I am pleased by the defection, the establishment of the line of demarcation between Democrats and New Dealers. Not that I care who runs the government, or is charged with responsibility. My interest lies deeper. I know from having watched the wheels go 'round that too great a majority of one party in congress produces bad laws. It can not be avoided.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY Lesson By REV. HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. © Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for April 10 FINDING OURSELVES IN SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 8:27-38.
GOLDEN TEXT—"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—Mark 8:36.
PRIMARY TOPIC—What Peter Found Out.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter's Right Answer.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Life Count Through Service.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Finding the Richest Life Through Service.

"Finding ourselves" seems like a singular, almost self-contradictory expression, but it refers to a sound principle recognized by psychologists as well as spiritual leaders. As a matter of fact, modern psychology has begun to recognize and use spiritual laws and principles which alone bring about human happiness and efficiency.

A word of warning—let no one who studies this lesson fall into the serious error of thinking that some formal religious service will bring redemption and favor with God. We are saved by grace through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ—"not of works, lest any man should boast." It is then by the new birth that we are "created in Christ Jesus unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them" (Eph. 2:8-10).

It is the Christian who needs to "find himself in service." Only as he thus yields to Christ does he really find the life worth living. The words of Jesus in verse 35 are solemnly and gloriously true.

I. Clear Confession (vv. 27-30).

Even those who deny to our Christ the recognition of His deity, and the devotion of life which is His just due, must, if they are at all intelligent, admit that no man ever lived who has made such an impact on human history. Even in the days of his life on earth those who did not accept Him as Christ regarded Him as the resurrected form of one of the nation's greatest leaders. Now unbelieving men speak of Him as the great founder of Christianity, a mighty leader, a wonderful example, or an unequalled teacher.

It is not enough that we stand with the mass of humanity who may thus admire Him, but who do not count Him as Saviour and Lord. The question comes to us as it did to the disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" "Thou art the Christ"—this alone suffices as the foundation for Christian testimony and conduct.

II. Corrected Error (vv. 31-33).

Although Jesus was not yet ready to have His Messiahship proclaimed to the public, He was prepared to teach His disciples concerning not only that important truth, but of His rejection and death. "He began to teach them that the Son of man must suffer . . . be rejected . . . killed and . . . rise again."

Note the divine "must." While it is true that wicked men showed their hostility toward our God and His Christ by hanging Him on Calvary's cross, yet it was to die for our sins that He came into the world. The cross has rightly come to represent God's love to the world rather than man's hostility to God.

Error now asserts itself, and strangely enough it is the very one who had the clearest grasp of the truth regarding the Messiahship of Christ and boldly expressed it who now objects to the revelation of the coming death and resurrection of Christ, and lends his voice to rebuke the Master for speaking of it.

Satan hates the cross and the open grave. Jesus won the victory over him there. He did not want to hear of it before it took place and used impulsive Peter for a mouthpiece to object. He doesn't want to hear about it now and uses many a skillful and gifted preacher to speak against it. "The offense of the cross" (Gal. 5:11) has never ceased.

III. Consecrated Life and Service (vv. 34-38).

"Let him deny himself" (v. 34). That command we have construed to mean that we should perform little acts of self-denial, foregoing some comfort or pleasure, possibly for a few weeks. It does not mean that at all—but does mean the renouncing of self and self-will, and a complete yielding to God's will. Likewise, to take up one's cross does not mean to bear some of life's little disagreeable experiences; it means again to die to self and to live for Christ.

Careful attention should be given to the solemn questions asked and statements made in verses 35-37. These are not the reasonings of a man—they fall from the lips of the Son of God. What, He asks, will you give in exchange for your soul?

Payment
How little we pay our way in life! Although we have our purses continually in our hand, the better part of service goes still unrewarded.

Discussion
The more discussion the better, if passion and personalities be eschewed.

Pain
Pain is in itself a sharp discipline and hard to bear.

WHAT TO EAT and WHY ★ C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Precious MINERAL SALTS

That You Must Have in Order to Build Strong Bones, Sound Teeth, Healthy Nerves, Rich Red Blood

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York.

THE human body is often compared to a machine, but it is far more wonderful, far more complex, than the most intricate machine ever designed to run without stopping, day in and day out, for upwards of 70 years, is also a fully equipped chemical laboratory. For if a chemist should grind a man to bits and analyze the pieces, he would find at least 18 chemical elements, and possibly traces of several others.

In addition to oxygen, carbon, hydrogen and nitrogen, the body contains a wide variety of mineral materials, which are necessary to its proper functioning—and even to life itself. The list includes calcium, phosphorus, potassium, sulphur, sodium, chlorine, magnesium, iron, manganese, iodine and copper. All these substances must be furnished to the growing child—through food and drink—and generous amounts must also be supplied daily in the diet of adults, to replace the minerals that are constantly being used up.

Minerals Necessary to Life

It is vitally important that the homemaker should understand the function of these various salts and where they can be found. For if certain minerals are lacking in the body, the heart will stop beating. Without others, the bones cannot form properly. Still others are responsible for the rich red blood that makes the difference between a healthy person and a sickly one. Laboratory experiments have proved that if you leave out the smallest trace of the mineral known as manganese, you destroy the love of a mother for her child. And nutritionists—but unfortunately not mothers—are well aware that less than a thousandth of an ounce of iodine makes all the difference between a normal man and an imbecile.

Calcium—Captain of Minerals

Calcium deserves its ranking position as the captain of the minerals, because it builds the bones, or body framework. And the bony skeleton is to the human being what steel is to a building. Calcium is also the chief constituent of the teeth and upon healthy teeth rests the health of the digestive system and, in turn, the entire body. For food that is improperly masticated is imperfectly digested and fails to nourish properly.

About 99 per cent of the calcium in the body is found in the teeth and bones. If the body does not receive an adequate supply of this mineral in pre-natal life and during the growing years, the bones will be porous, distorted and easily broken; and the teeth will develop cavities and eventually may fall out.

In addition to being the principal material for making and maintaining the bones and teeth, calcium increases the strength and pulsations of the heart and helps the blood coagulate in case of injury, thus keeping you and your loved ones from bleeding to death. That is why an extra supply of calcium is fed to patients just before an operation.

Calcium Builds Will Power

There is a close relationship between calcium and sound, healthy nerves. And this precious substance likewise helps us to concentrate mentally—it strengthens our will power—and assists us in acquiring that "do or die" attitude toward life, which is essential in an age when we must all struggle or go under.

Yet despite its importance, it is estimated by that outstanding authority, Henry C. Sherman, Professor of Nutrition at Teachers College, Columbia University, that one-half of the American people—even those with plenty of money—are literally starving for calcium, because they do not know the food sources of this vitally important mineral.

Where to Obtain Calcium

The foremost sources of calcium are milk and cheese, which is milk in concentrated form. It is chiefly to provide adequate calcium that homemakers must follow the rule of a quart of milk daily for every child, and a pint for each adult.

Vegetables, such as spinach, lettuce, celery, asparagus, string beans, cabbage, carrots and cauliflower are also a good supplementary source of calcium. And some fruits, such as oranges, figs, strawberries and bananas likewise supply significant amounts.

Indispensable Phosphorus

Like calcium, phosphorus is required by the body in relatively large amounts, and like calcium, it is especially important in the diet of children, because it is deposited in the bones, along with calcium, as calcium phosphate.

Phosphorus is indispensable for all the active tissues in the body and plays an important part in regulating the neutrality of the blood. It can be obtained from whole grain cereals, eggs, dried beans, cheese, lean meats, and root and leafy vegetables.

Iron—King Pin of Them All

But measured in terms of food essentials, iron is king pin of them all. It is the supreme element in nutrition because it is necessary for the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment in the blood. And it is the hemoglobin which carries purifying oxygen to every cell in the body. Recently, it has been discovered that copper is required for the proper utilization of iron.

"Red blooded" is a term understood by everyone to denote health and strength, and it is iron that makes us red blooded. When your children grow pale and listless, lose their pep and lack appetite, it is likely that they are starving for iron. If you become short of breath and "pant" when going up hill, or upstairs, even though there is nothing wrong with your heart or lungs, the chances are that there is insufficient red pigment in the blood—not enough to take up an adequate supply of oxygen and carry it to the millions of cells throughout the body.

There is no excuse for cheating yourself or your children of a full

Tasty Baked Potatoes.—After baked potatoes are "done," gently crush the potato open and then return it to the oven to dry out for a few minutes.

Small Towels for Children.—Small size bath towels which are light in weight but firmly woven are easier for children to handle and are easier to launder.

Fresh Orange Juice.—It is best to squeeze the orange juice just before breakfast rather than the night before so that the air won't have a chance to attack the vitamin in the juice and also change the flavor.

Add Acid to Milk.—To help prevent curdling when acid and milk are combined, add the acid to the milk rather than the milk to the acid.

Sauce for Cold Meats.—An interesting sauce with cold meat, ham or pork calls for adding whipped cream and horseradish to tart, unsweetened apple sauce.

Delicious Meat Loaf.—Try placing a two-inch layer of meat loaf mixture in a shallow pan. Add a thin layer of sliced, hard-cooked eggs, chili sauce and minced celery. Cover with the rest of the meat mixture, bake in the usual way, then unmold and slice.

Sewing on Snaps.—When sewing snaps on a garment sew them on by means of buttonhole stitches and they will not pull out like plain over and over stitches.

Frying Fish Filets.—Try dipping fish filets in yellow corn meal, in milk and again in corn meal. Then fry them in deep fat until they are well browned.

Cleaning Parchment Shades.—Wipe off parchment lamp shades with a cloth dampened with olive oil. It will remove all soil and will restore the former freshness.

An Invaluable Aid To the Housewife

IN THIS issue you will find the fourth of the series of articles written by C. Houston Goudiss, famous food expert whose books, radio talks and lectures have made him known all over the country.

In this article Mr. Goudiss discusses the vitally important subject "Mineral Salts." He shows the necessity of these materials in the diet and their relation to the building of a strong heart, healthy nerves, rich red blood, strong bones and sound teeth. He also gives the food sources of these salts.

Read each one of these articles as they appear weekly in this newspaper. They will prove invaluable to the housewife in assisting her to keep the entire family mentally and physically fit.

measure of iron, for this mineral can easily be obtained from live egg yolk, whole grain cereals, molasses, dried fruits, dried peas, beans, nuts, lean meats and green vegetables.

Iodine—Molder of Men

Almost everyone has heard that iodine is the mineral which helps to prevent that disfiguring enlargement of the neck, known as simple goiter. But few people realize that it is the principal constituent of thyroxin, secretion of the thyroid gland, and that the thyroid functions normally only when sufficient iodine is available.

A wide variety of physiological disorders have been laid to iodine hunger. Obesity is frequently the result of thyroid disturbance. Specialists contend that stubborn skin diseases are associated with disorders of this gland. Many people are accused of laziness who are really suffering from thyroid deficiency. And competent authorities claim that the thyroid likewise influences mental make-up and emotional tendencies.

Iodine is found chiefly in sea food and in fruits and vegetables grown near the sea. In inland regions, where soil and water are poor in iodine, health authorities frequently add it to the drinking water. And the use of iodized salt is also recommended. By these simple measures, thousands of growing children can be saved from the disastrous results of iodine deficiency.

In general, it can be said that the minerals calcium, phosphorus, iron and iodine are supplied in adequate amounts, the other minerals will be automatically furnished.

But every homemaker should make it her solemn responsibility to provide these four in abundance. For only that way can you insure optimal growth in children, develop vigorous health in adults, and maintain the highest possible tone of every organ in the body.

A Splendid "Service" for Floors

Floors receive rougher treatment than any other part of the home—and it is floors that show up to poorest advantage when neglected—best advantage, when properly cared for! Up to now attractive floors have required some little time and attention, but this is no longer necessary. For into the field of domestic preparations has come "self-polishing wax"—liquid-smooth, simple to apply, lovely to see. This remarkable preparation goes on easily, quickly, and dries in 20 minutes. Its results are 4-fold: The floor is protected—they are preserved—they stay freshly-clean longer—and they are beautified! A quality self-polishing wax protects and preserves, by forming a film over the surface—hard enough to withstand friction and grinding wear—and-tear. It induces floors to stay clean longer, because dirt and grease cannot become imbedded in the wood. It beautifies, because it is shimmering, transparent, and brings out the natural beauty of the wood. And what more could the home-maker ask for? There are, however, various qualities of self-polishing wax available. Only the best should be used, for both the appearance and condition of the floors. Buy the finest self-polishing wax is joy to use—its lasting results a joy to see!

FLOORS POLISH THEMSELVES

...with O-Cedar Self-Polishing Wax. No rubbing—simply spread it on and let it dry—then watch your floors sparkle! Non-slippery, long-wearing—eliminates scrubbing—dusting alone keeps floors clean.

When Poles Prepared for Invasion

Well equipped, well-drilled, these steel-helmeted Polish troops were photographed at Bydgoszcz recently as they marched past their commander in chief, General Smigly-Rydz. Soon afterward they were rushed to the Lithuanian border to enforce a Polish ultimatum. When Lithuania capitulated the world breathed easier as the threat of war was removed.

New Star Is Born

A new star looms in the baseball world, as Mrs. Joe Medwick, wife of the St. Louis Cardinal star presents their new son, Joseph Michael, in his first photograph. Note the baby's first plaything gift from his father. Mother is holding it.

One-Legged Kegler in ABC Tournament

Carl R. Steinke, bowler from Pekin, Ill., can polish off the maples better than many keggers, despite his handicap of having only one leg.

He demonstrated that at the ABC meet at Chicago, when he rolled games of 125-122-104. He averages higher than that during the regular season.

Tornado Plays Freak Tricks

Property damage estimated at a million dollars and the loss of nine lives were the toll of a tornado that swept through Belleville, Ill., recently. This picture shows an automobile owner looking at his wrecked car. Note the piece of wood that went all the way through the tire.

Cavalry, Old-Fashioned and Modern

A strange scene during recent maneuvers of the French army. The old style cavalry is shown moved to the road (left) to give the right of way to cavalry's mechanized successor, swift-moving and hard-hitting armored cars. Scenes like this are being duplicated today as France prepares her war machine for any event that may happen about her troubled frontiers.

That Kind
"But surely that little thing is too small to be a watch dog?"
"Oh, no, gov'nor. It's the latest thing—a wrist watch dog."

Said the husband: "It does no good for me to put my foot down. My wife soon convinces me that I haven't a leg to stand on."

Noteworthy Aim
Teacher—Tommy, what is your great ambition?
Tommy — To wash mother's ears.

THE SOLUTION

"Half the world doesn't know how the other half lives."
"Well, why doesn't the other half advertise?"

Efficiency Plus
"George," said the bride's mother, "did you send for a doctor?"
"I sent for three," replied the efficiency expert proudly. "Whoever gets here first gets the case."

Frankness is evident in a wedding invitation recently received: "We desire your presents at the wedding of our daughter."

No Board
Son—Father, I've decided to become an artist. Have you any objection?
Father—No, my boy, provided you don't draw on me.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

THIS pink and white chintz apron with pink gingham frills should inspire anyone to make long strides towards the kitchen. It is easy to cut. The material required is 1½ yards of 36-inch-wide chintz or cotton print and one yard of plain material.

For the skirt of the apron, cut a piece of paper or cloth 27 inches wide and 23 inches deep. Fold this lengthwise through the center, as at A, then measure down from the top of the fold and in from the corners the distances indicated in the diagram and mark the dots. Using the dots as a guide, mark the outline of the apron skirt as you see it in the diagram. The dimensions for shaping the bib are given in the diagram at B. The pocket is a 5-inch square with lower corners rounded as shown here at C. The apron ties are cut 6 inches wide and 36 inches long. The strip for the belt should be cut 2½ inches wide and a facing strip the same width should be cut for it. The shoulder straps are cut 4 inches wide and then creased lengthwise through the center.

The strips of the plain material for the ruffles are cut 6 inches wide. The ruffle material before it is gathered should be 2½ times the length of the space it is to fill after gathering. Use the machine hemmer foot shown here at the lower left for hemming the ruffles and the machine ruffler for gathering them.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' latest book—Gifts and Embroidery number—is now ready. Ninety embroidery stitches are illustrated; also table settings; crochet; embroidery designing; fabric repairing; novelty gifts and dress accessories. Forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions. Available to readers who will send name and address and enclose 25 cents (com preferred). Just address Mrs. Spears, 210 So. Desplaines St., Chicago.

TIPS to Gardeners

Young Garden Care

THE value of a garden plant, vegetable or flower, depends greatly upon the start it gets; so give the seedlings ample care.

Begin cultivation as soon as rows are visible, if the soil is not wet. Work close to the small plants, cultivating shallower as they grow to avoid injury to root growth.

Cultivate at least once a week.

Watering should not be necessary the first week or ten days after seeds have sprouted. Later, young plants may be watered one of two ways. Mark a shallow trench about four inches from the row and run it full of water. Or, using a fine spray, apply water from directly above plants. Watering is most effective when it closely follows cultivation.

Small plants should be thinned, as directed on packets, to allow proper development. Certain vegetables may be used as thinned. For instance, onions thinned may be used as green onions, and lettuce may be picked for immediate use, leaving smaller leaves to develop.

Time Well Spent

Do not think it wasted time to submit yourself to any influence which may bring upon you any noble feeling.—Ruskin.

8. Was Edward Everett Hale related to Nathan Hale, the patriot of the Revolution?
9. How many parts of speech are there?
10. What part of what state is farther north than any other in the Union?

The Answers

1. The state of Delaware has only three counties. It has only one city (Wilmington) with a population of over 100,000.
2. The recognized record for circling the bases is 13.4 seconds, made by Evar Swanson of the Cincinnati Reds, September 15, 1929.
3. In 1690 by the Massachusetts Bay colony. It was gradually issued by other colonies until in general use by all.
4. It is so called in the sense of its being normal, regular, conformable to a recognized standard type.

5. No.
6. The vertical clearance at the center of the bridge is 220 feet above mean high water, so boats can easily pass under it.
7. As turkey is American by origin, it seems incorrect to associate this job with the ancient Hebrew. Poor, of course, refers to a thin and weak fowl, not to the lack of money.
8. He was his grandnephew. Edward Everett Hale's father, Nathan Hale, was a nephew of the Nathan Hale who was hanged by the British as an American spy.
9. Eight: Nouns, pronouns, adjectives, verbs, adverbs, prepositions, conjunctions and interjections.
10. Lake of the Woods county, Minnesota.

Tuesday was Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch's birthday, so a group of the younger people of the church, gathered at his home to surprise him. The evening was spent in visiting after which the guests served lunch. Monday evening the Adult Bible Class met, and after the meeting at the church, they all had a lunch together, and the main dish was a beautifully baked birthday cake, in honor of Rev. Grosshuesch. He was presented with a purse of money.

SPORTS CHATTER (by "Flash")

Baseball season is getting underway. We see that we didn't lose one player from last fall, which only means the Shamrocks should go to town. Our line-up is Kluckhohn, pitching; Schuldt, catching. Grosshuesch, first base, Trampel, second base; Grange, short stop. Trees, third base; and Buseman, Greimann, Lemke, Wicks, Stille and Wille fighting for outfield positions. We play our rival, Goodell, Thursday, over there if the weather is good.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2

We are making a train. It will be large enough to really play in. We are using boxes and a barrel for the boiler. When it is finished we will paint it black.

Richard and Delores came back to school this week.

We made pussywillow posters Thursday.

Some of the second graders made up poems about trains. We all made one up together.

GRADES 3 AND 4

We are making story booklets in Language class. Fourth graders are writing stories about "Jungle Friends" and the third graders are writing about "Barnyard Pets." We made the covers during art periods.

We are working on a large chart of journeys taken in geography study. Each one is making an individual chart during study periods.

The third graders made free-hand drawings of Dutch people during extra time. They plan to paste them on a large poster.

Our new unit in fourth grade reading class is "Busy Workers and Their Work." Ronald made a drawing of one of the stories he liked best.

"Hero Stories" is the last unit in our third grade reader. We have enjoyed reading some Bible stories which we had heard at Sunday School and Bible School.

We are practising hard with our toy instruments. This year we are planning our own pieces. On Friday we finished planning how to play "The Swing." Now we are planning to give a program for Miss Hanson's room.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Herbert Schwartz and Lawrence Bock—reporters.

Eunice came back to school again on Monday afternoon.

Julia Bell made a star rating in the sixth grade self-testing drill.

We are making Easter pictures in art classes.

Herbert M. and Duard brought us our first pussywillows this week.

Those who received a hundred per cent in spelling were: Lawrence, Duard, Marjorie, Herbert S., Junior, Patricia, Corrine and Barbara.

GRADES 7 AND 8

Betty Jean Reed has visited our room with Betty Eichen. Colleen Gram was also a visitor.

Freda Kaduce has returned this week after being absent three weeks.

The seventh grade finished their booklets on "Valuable Trees of the United States."

Arlene Buseman, Melvin Coobs, Elwyn Jacobs, Betty Etchen, and Caroline Schwartz received one hundred per cent in spelling.

It's easy to be THRIFTY!

It cannot be too often repeated that thrift does not mean hoarding. It means wise saving and wise spending. Here is the easy formula for thrift: Save something every pay-day and buy what you need and can afford. It sounds simple, doesn't it? And it is.

Whether you are saving for a new home, a car,
a washing machine, a radio, a college education, a trip to Bermuda or the new baby, who came to brighten the atmosphere of your fireside, do not keep your money under the traditional mattress or behind the clock where thieves can get it, but

China's Great Wall Marked North Line of Spreading Empire

By EMILY C. DAVIS

New York. — Why ancient China built her Great Wall—that twisting dragon of a wall, 1,500 miles across the north—is a problem for geographers.

They see more in China's stony guardian than a military defense. As a war-time barrier the wall was ineffective, though thousands of Chinese were worked to death to build it. One jester summed up the result: The Chinese never got over it; but the Tartars did.

Some Chinese have accounted for their Great Wall as a powerful stone dragon built to keep evil spirits out. But geographers, probing into ancient China's political and social problems, are beginning to look upon the Great Wall as a geographic affair.

In a report to the Geographical Review, Owen Lattimore, geographer, points out that the Chinese were great wall builders long before the day of the Great Wall. In feudal days, when China was still made of separate states, Fifth to Third centuries B. C., these states built walls against one another as well as against the northern barbarians.

Vague Northern Boundary.

So, when Emperor Huang Ti formed the states into an empire, the idea of rigid boundaries was familiar, and all China was driven to concentrate on marking the empire's northern limit.

This was done, it appears, to keep undesirable out and to keep desirable in. The wall marked plainly the northern limit beyond which the empire did not wish to spread. This separating sheep from goats was highly desirable for civilized China. Tribes in Manchuria, Mongolia and Central Asia were uncouth, and their life in forest, desert, or plain was far different from China's intensive farming economy.

But the Great Wall, Mr. Lattimore explains, was never more than a vague boundary. There was pressure and pull in a wide border region. Barbarians would become partly Chinese, and frontier Chinese would drift into anti-Chinese traits. The balance of power in many of China's struggles has rested with betwixts - and - betweens, in zones spreading out from the Great Wall.

Beauty Tricks Common Among Ancient Women

New York.—Modern damsels in quest of beauty haven't tried everything—far from it. Even if they have painted their fingernails, plucked their eyebrows, copied Hollywood make-ups, look at these beauty notions from the past, reported in "Natural History" by Virginia Eifert:

Roman ladies used to paint blue veins on their lily-white foreheads, to look fragile.

Greek women introduced artificial eyebrows, out of a box.

Japanese women of fashion sometimes gilded the lower lip.

Cleopatra brightened the palms of her hands with henna.

As for men, they may like to know Persian kings wore costly perfumes in battle. And Roman conquerors painted themselves bright red when they rode home in triumph.

Cellulose Film Masks

Protect Tar Sprays

Berkeley, Calif.—Users of tar sprays as an insecticide are cautioned to wear cellulose film masks to protect themselves from the caustic effects the sprays have on their skins.

Suggesting tucking a piece of cellulose film under one's hatband and pulling it down to expose fresh areas as the exposed portion becomes clouded, Dr. Leslie M. Smith, writing in a bulletin of the University of California experiment station, reports this method as one of the most effective in combating injury from the tar spray.

Blonds are more sensitive to poisoning from the tar spray than are dark people, and one is more susceptible to injury during the day than during the night, Dr. Smith finds.

Candling Infertile Eggs

Washington.—Candling eggs after from 14 to 20 hours of incubation can detect the infertile ones that can never hatch, thereby saving about ten per cent in hatchery space, declare M. W. Olsen and Dr. C. W. Knox of the United States Department of Agriculture. All that is needed is an ordinary egg candler and a 75 watt lamp. Eggs that do not show a darkish spot as big as a dime are infertile and may just as well be thrown out at once.

Wildlife Refugees on Private Lands Urged by Biologist

Washington.—Wildlife must be produced on privately owned farm lands as well as on lands publicly owned if America's bird and game resources are to be perpetuated, Dr. Ira N. Gabrielson, chief of the United States biological survey, declares in his annual report to the secretary of agriculture.

Publicly owned lands, despite the fact that large additions have been made during recent years, are not sufficient to perpetuate species of wildlife, he indicated.

Dr. Gabrielson notes that 600,000 acres of refuge land were purchased during the fiscal year covered in the report, while more than half a million acres were held pending title conveyance. Almost a million acres were added by executive order.

Tons of duck-foed plants and millions of food-bearing trees and shrubs have been placed in refuge areas to make the area attractive to wildlife, the survey director said.

Despite the wide program being carried out, however, a study of wildlife management as a farm enterprise indicates that state and federal lands alone cannot supply sufficient wildlife or adequate facilities for its use and enjoyment by the public.

Restrictions Necessary.

"The necessity for severe restrictions on hunting has not passed," Dr. Gabrielson maintains. Benefits, he points out, of strict regulation are shown in the fact that some waterfowl increases have now been noted for two consecutive years.

Wildlife populations of the refuges have already increased three-fold. Planting and transplanting, building water-conserving structures and other activities by the Civilian Conservation corps and Works Progress administration have aided the program.

Since July 1, 1933, when the present program began, the survey has purchased 1,500,000 acres of refuge lands. In the same period more than 4,000,000 acres have been acquired by executive order. Increase of wildlife depends, providing hunting is regulated, on the amount of land available for wildlife. It is for that reason that the biological survey chief urges the use of private lands for wildlife production.

Heart Is Not Harmed by Athletic Exercise

Melbourne.—Strenuous athletic activities have no bad effect on the heart, in the opinion of Dr. E. L. Cooper, Dr. J. O'Sullivan and E. Hughes of the University of Sydney, Australia.

These scientists examined a series of oarsmen from universities and colleges before going into training, after training and before and after racing.

They found that during muscular exercise the heart does not dilate at all, but that it may enlarge as a result of training, although as soon as training is stopped it rapidly reverts to its original size. They could find no evidence of any permanent change to the heart as a result of training for and taking part in athletic sports. Their final conclusions were that even extreme physical effort on the part of an athlete such as the final dozen at the end of an exhausting two-mile rowing race does not result in damage to the heart.

"Dirty River Eyebrow" Studied by Geologists

Chicago.—Grimly glowering at the western edge of the Albuquerque plain in New Mexico, a great black cliff, called the Ceja del Rio Puerco (Eyebrow of the Dirty River, in English) tells geologists a weird tale of volcanic eruptions in the not very distant past, Dr. Kirk Bryan, Harvard university geologist, reports in the Journal of Geology. He and Dr. Franklin T. McCann, of Dayton, Ohio, studied the area.

Long ago, when the Rio Grande flowed in a channel 500 feet higher than the present one, they find, lavas from Mount Taylor, a volcano active before the ice ages, poured over the plain. Later the rivers cut into the lavas, creating grim escarpments like the "eyebrow." Still later, the Rio Puerco cut into the headwaters of streams flowing into the Rio Grande from the west, "pirating" the waters.

Wool Made From Milk

Rome.—Synthetic wool made from milk is now being produced in quantity in Italy, under the trade name of Lanital. In 1936 the total output was 94 tons; in 1937, more than 800 tons. The product is made from casein, the part of milk that is the chief constituent of cheese.

Termites in Germany

Hamburg, Germany.—Termites have made their appearance in this North German seaport. They were discovered in the wooden lining of a heating shaft. This is very high latitude for termites: Hamburg is as far north as central Labrador.

MURDERED: A PARAMECIUM

Perfects 'Death Ray' in Battle on Civilization's Greatest Enemy, the One-Celled Micro-Organism

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

In the madcap 1920's a sober young laboratory engineer for the Detroit Edison company was married. Dr. Robert F. James is his name, a World war veteran with an M. D. degree from the University of Michigan.

Dr. James and Mrs. James moved into an apartment equipped with an obsolete electric refrigerator which emitted a musty odor. They didn't like it, so they did something about it.

The musty odor is indirectly responsible for one of the greatest steps in sanitation progress the world has ever taken. It is the story about perfection of a new and economical ultraviolet lamp that kills germs instantly but doesn't bother people. Its inventors were Dr. Robert F. James and another scientist, Dr. Harvey C. Rentschler. The device, called "sterilamp," has just been announced.

The new lamp has already shown its value in trial installations. At Duke hospital in Durham, N. C., it was placed over the operating table, immediately bringing about a reduction in post-operation infections. Dealers have installed it in refrigerators with a resulting decrease in spoilage. Bakers delay formation of mold on products, and restaurants use it to sterilize their glasses. These are a few of its applications.

The Fight for Sanitation. Sterilization by ultraviolet radiation is a far cry from the battle against micro-organisms waged by cent of the bacteria in far corners of the room also died.

Inventors of the amazing Rentschler-James process: Right: Dr. Robert F. James, whose ice box had a musty odor, and (below) Dr. Harvey C. Rentschler, internationally known ray authority.

Helps the Butcher.

Meat dealers have found the lamp invaluable. Forced to carry from 500 to 1,500 pounds of meat in his refrigerator at all times, the butcher has in the past suffered great losses from spoilage caused by mold and slime, the result of combined high refrigeration temperature and high humidity. Low refrigeration temperatures have been similarly unfavorable because too much moisture is evaporated. But with the new lamp—which gives little heat—refrigerators need only be kept sufficiently cool to prevent flabbiness. Bacteria and mold are killed immediately.

Fresher bread and cake is guaranteed by bakeries where "sterilamp" has been tested. Two large firms used the lamp to retard mold growth on fruit cakes. Before installation, spoilage of the cakes amounted to about 15 per cent, a figure which dropped to 1 or 2 per cent after the lamps were adopted.

Although physical limitations have prohibited attempts at sterilization in connection with farm products, progress can be made in this field.

What of the Future?

Today the lamps are being used regularly by a number of farms, not only in connection with milking, but in hen houses, brooder houses and hog pens. One of the nation's largest poultry farms has adopted the process to combat infection.

Far-sighted scientists have predicted a day when the new lamp may free us from the worry of bacterial infection. Obviously the next application of this process will be to the atmosphere itself, a field in which experimentation is already being made.

The vast variety of fields in which the lamp eventually may be applied appears to be virtually limitless. Today one of the best known cosmetics manufacturers in the country is regularly using the Rentschler-James process to irradiate toothpaste and cleansing creams.

Science, whose Twentieth century gifts to civilization are already legion, has hurdled another barrier in its drive to make the world a safe, happy and healthy place to live!

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

IF YOU have read Damon Runyon's short stories and roared over them, or even if you haven't, mark down "A Slight Case of Murder" as a picture that will make you laugh until you ache all over.

You may think it improbable and incongruous that four corpses could rouse you to such hilarity, but these are characters that would be disposed of without tears in any picture.

The inspired casting of the picture is what makes it such fun, for Edward G. Robinson plays a comic gangster. Instead of the domineering, swaggering, ruthless menace that he has played so often and so well, he plays here a blundering mugg who just isn't quite bright.

Richard Himber gave a party for Kay Thompson, Lou Holtz, and the rest of the co-workers on his radio program and ever since the CBS studios have looked like a meeting of the Society of Amateur Magicians. Himber did card tricks at his party. Not to be outdone, Lou Holtz learned to pick watches out of the air. Kay Thompson is specializing in those old scarf tricks where one small handkerchief torn to bits turns into yards and yards of vari-colored scarfs.

Robert Benchley, whose short film comedies have been such a success, will soon be launched on a radio program of his own. The Stroud twins will stay with the Bergen-McCarthy-Ameche program through June 19, and Frank Morgan has cancelled a vacation trip to Europe because fans wrote and urged that he be kept on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer "Good News" hour.

When you hear the Radio Rubes singing old ballads from all parts of the country, you can be sure the songs are authentic. Mountain music and old Southern ditties are the special hobby of Eddie Smith and Luke Davis of the quintet who come from North Carolina. Zeb Turney, who is the Rubes' announcer, was brought up on the Western plains. He knew a big repertoire of cowboy songs when he was just a youngster.

By the time Universal gets around to making their first picture starring Charlie McCarthy, Shirley Temple may be old enough to play the leading role. First Irene Dunne was supposed to play the lead. Then Margaret Sullavan was engaged. Now the latest word is that Andrea Leeds, the pretty heroine of "The Goldwyn Follies," is going to have the fun of making the picture.

Rudy Vallee, who from time to time gets into battles with news photographers, turned soft-hearted recently and helped them get some pictures of Bing Crosby. Bing flatly refuses to pose for news pictures before or after his broadcasts. He usually wears an old sweater or a shirt open at the neck and he is afraid that too much attention might be called to his informal attire. Bing's love for real Maine lobsters was his downfall. A friend had shipped some to Vallee and he offered to share them with Bing only if he would pose for pictures when the presentation took place.

ODDS AND ENDS—When Janet Gaynor moved into a dressing room at the Selznick-International studio to start work on a new picture, the only personal furnishings she brought along were lots and lots of photographs of Tyrone Power. Only a few days before Tyrone had confided to Letta Hyams that she was the only motion-picture star he ever wrote a fan letter to. Child labor laws stand in the way of Bobby Breen's personal appearances in some cities. So as not to disappoint fans, he stands in the lobby and greets the customers wherever he is not allowed to appear on the stage. Wayne Morris has named his new police dog "Kid Galahad."

Very Smart New Fashions

A HOUSE dress with long slender lines, a dress and apron for little girls, and a popular bolero frock for slim young figures! You will certainly want one of these, and more likely will want all three. With each pattern, you receive a complete and detailed sew chart specially planned to help beginners, so that the making will be easy, and save you money besides.

Popular Bolero Frock.

Make it up of silk crepe or a pretty print, and see how expensive, how flattering, it looks! The short bolero and wide shoulders make the slim lines of the frock even more graceful. Notice how cleverly the dress is shirred into the front panel at the waistline. This is one of the prettiest afternoon dresses you could choose for this spring.

Dress and Apron for Tots.

Your little girl will be so proud of having this heart-shaped apron to put on over her best dress when she plays house! And the puff-sleeved, square-necked dress is adorable. You can make the two of them in no time. For the dress, choose dimity or organdy for dress-up; gingham or percale for every day. Dimity or lawn for the apron.

House Dress for Large Figures.

This is such a becoming, comfortable, good-looking dress to work in, round the house. The lines are so straight and unhampering, and pleats in the short sleeves give plenty of room for stretching and reaching. It takes inches off the figure, too. Make it up in seersucker, gingham, linen or percale printed in small designs.

The Patterns.

1478 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 6½ yards of 39-inch material. 1468 is designed for sizes 2, 4, 6, 8 years. Size 4 requires 1½ yards of 35-inch material for the dress, with 6 yards of narrow ribbon to trim and 1 yard wider ribbon for the belt. Size 4 requires ¾ yard of 35-inch material for the apron, and 2½ yards of ruffling.

1476 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5 yards of 35-inch material without nap.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart which enables even a beginner to cut and make her own clothes.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

GARNER YOUTHS ARE FREED OF BOND

Three Accused Of Robbing Mails; Held To Federal Grand Jury

Three North Iowa men were freed on bonds Saturday after waiving preliminary hearing before U. S. Commissioner Charles W. Barlow at Mason City late Friday and being bound to the next term of the federal grand jury on a charge of robbing the U. S. mail.

Emanuel Jacobsen, 20, Garner, signed a written confession implicating his brother, Peter Jacobsen, 19, and Irving Hanson, 18, also of Garner, after which he was released under $1,000 bond. Peter Jacobsen and Hanson were released under $1,000 and $500 bonds, respectively.

The three were accused by E. H. Mahler, Mason City, federal post office inspector, of breaking into a rural mail box between Leland and Forest City, belonging to Geo. Andersen and taking mail from it, including a $113.38 check from the Garner Sales Co. which later was cashed by forging an endorsement.

The older Jacobsen and Hanson also are implicated in the robbery a week ago of the Klemme Creamery in which they took a small amount of money and a number of checks. Another Garner man is also being sought in connection with the Klemme robbery, according to authorities.

Hanson was released last winter from the Boys' Industrial school at Adora on parole.

Checks Recovered

Sixteen of the checks taken from the Klemme Creamery were located by Sheriff Brower under a cult near the Fred Stromer home. Garner Monday evening Paul Mueller and Walt Lemke drove up to Garner and found all but one of the missing checks.

CONSERVATION CHECKS ARRIVE

The 1937 conservation checks were received at the county office Saturday afternoon Ben V. Greimann, chairman of the committee and W. E. Puffer treasurer. Approximately $165,000.00 was received. A schedule for distributing the checks to participants in Hancock County has been made out. You must either get your check at one of the places listed below or at the county office following the time of the schedule around the county. Bring your envelopes with you since the county committee has a serial number recorded on them for convenience in locating your check. Do not call at the office for your check at a time when Mr. Puffer is scheduled for something in the county since he will have all the checks with him. Mr. Greimann asks that those calling for their checks at the office in Garner use the new stairway. The conservation offices being located over the Leader and Signal office now and you are asked to please use the outside stairway at the west end of the building.

Following is the schedule for distributing the checks:

Tuesday, 1:00 p. m. to 5:00 p. m., conservation office at Garner.

Wednesday, 8:00 a. m. to 12:00 p. m., Memorial Hall at Britt.

Thursday, 8:00 a. m. to 12:00 p. m., City Hall at Goodell.

FARMERS UNION HELD MEETING PAST WEEK

The Liberty Local of the Farmers Union held its regular monthly meeting at Liberty No. 7 school. After the regular business session, Mr. Henry Curvo spoke, but due to a sore throat was forced to cut his speech short. Robert Berding favored the group with several selections on his piano accordion.

The following resolution was drawn up and copies forwarded to Vice-President Garner, Senators Gillette and Herring, Speaker of the House Rayburn and Representative Gilchrist:

Whereas we believe the powers granted to the executive in said reorganization bill are dictatorial and will eventually set up a dictatorship, we ask that you use your influence and work unceasingly and vote against said reorganization bill or its skeleton

Standard Bearers Held Meeting

The April meeting of the Klemme Standard Bearers was held on Monday evening in the Methodist Church. After the business meeting and pot-luck supper there was a program. This consisted of devotions led by Novella Bredbenner and the lesson which was supposed to be the conversation between a group of Moslem women at their club in Paris and a Standard Bearer girl. The Moslem women told how the English language and the Christian religion is greatly influencing their people, especially the women who have been dominated for many centuries.

No man can make a fool of himself all the time—he has to sleep occasionally.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I have received a card from the county office giving me my corn acreage allotment and total soil-depleting allotment. Where can I find out what these figures mean and what I will have to do in order to conform to the farm program?

A. See your township committee-man, who will be able to help you.

Q. If I fail to reach my soil-building goal, will any deduction be made from my corn payment or the payment that I get for keeping within my total soil-depleting acreage allotment?

A. Failure to meet your soil-building goal will not reduce your corn payment nor the payment for keeping within your total soil-depleting acreage allotment.

Q. If I own a farm in one county for which I am receiving payment and I own a farm in another county on which I have materially exceeded my usual acreage of soil-depleting crops, will deduction be made from the payments which I receive in the one county?

A. Yes. The state committee may make deductions if the over-planting of soil-depleting crops in one county substantially offsets the contribution to the program in other counties.

Q. If Hegari is frosted before the formation of grain, can it be considered a soil-depleting crop under these conditions.

A. Hegari is considered a grain sorghum and is classified as soil-depleting no matter how it is used.

Q. If I plant 15 acres to half timothy and half alfalfa and clover, how many units will that count toward my soil-building goal?

A. One unit per acre, or, in your case, a total of 15 units.

Q. What must I do to be eligible for a corn loan?

A. You must keep within your corn acreage allotment. If the corn acreage allotment on a farm is not exceeded, the corn on that farm is eligible for a corn loan.

Q. If field corn is canned, is it counted in the corn allotment?

A. The docket provides for the exemption of sweet corn when it is sold for canning or roasting ears, but not field corn.

Q. If I sow a pasture crop in connection with my soil-building goal, do I need evidence as to the purchase of seed and the sowing of seed?

A. Yes. You should get Form NCR-221 at your county office and have it signed by the party from whom you are purchasing the seed. Also sign it yourself and send it to the county office where it will be filed.

Q. Suppose my farm has a net payment of $100. Will that payment be increased because this is a small farm? If so, approximately how much?

A. Yes, your payment will be increased $14.

Everybody seems to follow some rule to improve his health—except the average doctor.

CHILDREN FROM NEAR AND FAR WILL PARTICIPATE IN THE FUN

Country And Town Children Will All Get Colored Eggs For Easter

The business and professional men of Klemme are sponsoring a big Easter Egg Hunt for the children of Klemme and the surrounding trade territory to be staged Saturday afternoon, April 16th.

The business people of Klemme are inviting all of the boys and girls to take part in the fun and any boy or girl ten years old and under is invited. There will be plenty of colored eggs for all the boys and girls, and special attention will be given the tiny tots so that they may fill their baskets with Easter eggs.

Hunt Begins At 2:30 O'clock

The boys and girls will meet at the vacant lot just east of the Wellemeyer Store, where they will be given instructions on where to find the eggs, and all will start on the hunt at a given signal.

Each boy and girl should bring with them a small basket in which to place their eggs. Each boy and girl will be allowed to pick up only six colored eggs and, in addition, prize eggs which will be announced at the meeting place.

Prize Eggs Will Be Hidden

The prize eggs will be plain and will have written on them the names of various business men. The boys and girls who find these prize eggs may take them to the merchant whose name appears on the egg and in return receive a prize.

Children Will Be Looked After

A school boy patrol, in charge of Supt. Galbreth, will watch over the youngsters and see to it that the hunt is carried out in an orderly manner.

Parents are urged to come to town early Saturday afternoon so that their children may enjoy the fun. Don't forget the date: this week Saturday, April 16th at 2:30 o'clock. It's all free and it's all for the entertainment of the kids in this community.

GRANDMA KRAUS HONORED ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY

Grandma C. J. Kraus celebrated her 77th birthday Thursday afternoon and in honor of the event a number of the older ladies of the Reformed Church came to her home and had a party in her honor.

Mrs. Kraus is the oldest member of the aid society and a special decorated cake was baked in her honor. All of the ladies brought lunch with them and the afternoon was spent in a social way. Mrs. Kraus told of her childhood days and the ladies sang old favorite songs. Rev. Grosshuesch gave a talk.

In the evening all of Mrs. Kraus' children and their families came to spend the evening with her.

Correction

In the Times last week an error was made in the item regarding a miscellaneous shower for Mrs. Carol Larson, in that the hostess was given as Mrs. Fred Kluckhohn. The hostesses were Mrs. Robert Marshall and Mrs. Roger Schlamin, and the shower was held at the Kluckhohn home.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG WASHINGTON D C

Washington.—To have a clear understanding of the discussion that is to follow, I think I must first find a definition of the word "contumacy." It ought to be properly and officially defined because it is going to be a very important word in this country. So, I read from the dictionary here on my desk the following definition:

CONTUMACY, contemptuous disregard of authority; insolent disregard of authority; incorrigible obstinacy.

Next, it should be set down that there are—rather, there were two men with the surname of Morgan as officials of the Tennessee Valley authority before President Roosevelt removed one of them from office for contumacy. The fact that there were two Morgans must be remembered because each one figures prominently in a continuing controversy and for the reason that neither one of the Morgans is connected with "the House of Morgan" to which so many demagogues refer when they talk about economic royalists.

In the third place, we should know something about David E. Lilienthal, who, like the two Morgans, also was a director of the TVA. Mr. Lilienthal continues to be a director, as does Harcourt Morgan. The Morgan who no longer has official connection with TVA, according to President Roosevelt, is Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, founder of the famous Antioch college at Yellow Springs, Ohio. Arthur Morgan was removed as chairman of the TVA because the President said he was guilty of "contumacy," and Harcourt Morgan was made chairman.

The removal took place by executive order after Mr. Roosevelt had personally held three hearings for the purpose, he said, of determining who was wrong in an old-fashioned cat and dog fight that has been going for months among the three directors of TVA. Arthur Morgan had made accusations against the other two directors, charges of a libelous nature, charges of dishonesty—in short, charges that the other two directors were guilty of enough things to cause their removal from office. Arthur Morgan had openly urged a congressional investigation of the TVA as well, and when Mr. Roosevelt made his own investigation and Arthur Morgan refused to offer one iota of evidence to support his previous charges, he was guilty of contumacy and the Chief Executive removed, or just plain fired, him.

And so, we come to another phase. In urging a congressional investigation, Arthur Morgan followed what he thought was the proper course. He held that the TVA was a creature of congress which placed in its law, its legal charter, that none of the directors could be removed unless on charges that they had played political favorites in TVA appointments. He thought that the White House investigation was a means of checking a congressional investigation which had been so vigorously opposed by Senator Norris of Nebraska, father of the TVA and Roosevelt supporter. That is to say, Chairman Morgan didn't believe President Roosevelt had any authority to call in the three directors and there, in the presence of all, compel the chairman to substantiate his charges. So he stood pat. But Mr. Roosevelt believed he did have authority and he used it. He removed Arthur Morgan and promoted Harcourt Morgan to the TVA chairmanship.

Well, there had been a lot of hemming and hawing around the senate over the general TVA investigation proposed by the fighting young Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, who was joined in the battle by Sen. William H. King of Utah. Senator Norris succeeded in stalling the investigation for quite awhile. But after the White House investigation which Senator Bridges contemptuously referred to as a "comic opera trial," things began to happen in the house of representatives as well as in the senate and so now there is scheduled an investigation in which house and senate will join, an inquiry that will go into every phase of TVA to see what makes it tick.

There can be no doubt at all that instead of satisfying the country, especially congress, as to the merits of the TVA row, the White House investigation had the effect of bringing about a far-reaching investigation in congress. Many bitter words have been uttered about the White House course in firing Arthur Morgan, observations that Mr. Roosevelt had "railroaded" the chairman out of the TVA job; assertions that it constituted an American version of the famed French "Dreyfus case," assertions that "contumacy is a crime only where dictators operate," etc. Try as they may now, the public ownership advocates, socialists and others who believe in the state owning everything, are due to have the varnish removed from

TVA. The country at last is going to have a look at the real wood; they will get some facts that hitherto have been concealed or hushed up. That is, these things will come out for an airing unless the presidential lash whips enough committeemen into line to develop a whitewash.

Aside from the tragedy of having Arthur Morgan's name smeared, the TVA row and the White House investigation probably will be good for the country. Anybody who knows Arthur Morgan's record, must agree that it is one of which any man could be proud. It is too bad, therefore, that he has to be the goat in the case. But I repeat that the affair will result in considerable good if the whole TVA record can be brought into the open and the goings-on of public ownership advocates can be exposed for once insofar as TVA is concerned.

There is, however, something much more significant, much deeper, in this situation than just justice or injustice to one man. In this I refer to the use of authority by the President to make an independent official do the bidding of the Chief Executive. It is a case comparable in many respects to the removal of the late William E. Humphreys as a member of the federal trade commission. That was done, President Roosevelt said at the time, because Mr. Humphreys failed "to see eye to eye" with the Chief Executive. It is to be remembered, too, that the Supreme Court of the United States held unanimously that Mr. Roosevelt did not have the power to remove Mr. Humphreys. Thus, there is again a legal question whether the President had the power, although Homer S. Cummings, the attorney general, advised Mr. Roosevelt that such power was vested in him as President. Undoubtedly, Arthur Morgan will try out the matter in court.

The disturbing thing is, however, that if President Roosevelt has that much authority now, how much more authority will he have to do that sort of thing, and many, many others, if given authority to reorganize the government agencies as he sought in the original government reorganization bill. Of course, much of his demanded authority has been shorn from the bill, but I believe there is ground for alarm at what remains. Whether Mr. Roosevelt continues to be President indefinitely or whether some other man is President, I think congress has no right to give away such power.

But to get back to the case of Arthur Morgan, and his "contumacy." The meaning of the word is clear. Arthur Morgan, according to people who know him intimately, was trying to do the best job he knew how to do. He read the law one way; the President read it another. I see no legitimate reason for removal of the man on the grounds of contumacy. That is no crime. Discipline Mr. Morgan? Yes, if the President wanted to do so. Suspend him until the facts have been brought to light by a congressional inquiry, a mode of procedure which congress reserved to itself. But removal seems to be rather foolish, and the action certainly has reacted adversely to the President among his own partisans.

The White House inquiry failed to adduce any story about the operations of Harcourt Morgan and Mr. Lilienthal. I hear in many quarters that Mr. Lilienthal is the man who really started the trouble in the beginning. He is the same man who was connected with the Wisconsin utilities commission and wrote an order directing a reduction in telephone rates before holding a hearing to give interested parties a chance to have their day in court. If current reports be true, Mr. Lilienthal actually signed the order reducing rates several days before the so-called public hearing was held. The court called his action arbitrary and delivered itself of quite a tongue-lashing about such unwarranted and despotic action. That opinion was rendered late in February. Whether Mr. Lilienthal has been guilty of the same kind of despotism in TVA, I have no means of knowing; but, this much surely can be said: if he attempted anything of the kind, Arthur Morgan would be the first to object.

Mr. Lilienthal's operations in TVA, as far as they are visible from Washington, have the appearance and the results naturally to be expected of an extremist. Arthur Morgan is self-willed, too, but the records of the two men as far as they are known publicly assuredly shows him to understand human nature.

Mr. Roosevelt, having elected to fire Mr. Morgan for "contumacy" and thereby having placed himself on the side of Mr. Lilienthal, now must face the political music.

White House Guarded by New Fence

More than $30,000 is being spent in the erection of a new and higher ornamental fence around the White House against anyone seeking admission to the executive mansion grounds from the south. Workmen are shown as they removed the old fence in preparation for the new installation.

They're All Germans Now

A large percentage of the regular German army are not members of the official Nazi party and some observers say this may account for the fact that they were received in a friendly manner by the inhabitants of Austria.

Ferdinand of Hapsburg in Nazi Prison

Pictured in the uniform of a general in the happy days of the dual monarchy is Archduke Joseph Ferdinand of Hapsburg, chief of the royal Hapsburg-Tuscan line and great-uncle of the Archduke Otto, pretender to the throne of Austria.

The archduke achieved the doubtful distinction of becoming the Nazi's most illustrious prisoner, when he was arrested near Salzburg, charged with making insulting remarks about the Nazi regime. Hapsburg's chances of ever regaining the throne of Austria were regarded as completely killed by the successful Hitler coup.

CONQUERING THE POLES

Man Pushes Closer to Heart of 'Weather's Kitchen,' Seeking Short Cut Route Over Top of the World; Russians Pioneer Arctic

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

In 1909 courageous Robert E. Peary trudged to the North Pole. The world praised his conquest of the Arctic but with the same breath questioned: "What good is it?"

That cynical attitude persisted until last May when a group of intrepid Russian scientists and aviators began the most thorough examination of Arctic wastes yet attempted by men, braving untold hardships to gather data about the weather's "kitchen."

Suddenly the whole world has become aware of the potential value that lies within the Arctic and Antarctic circles. As Russia goes to work, the United States looks with renewed interest to Alaska, her own far north province. In Canada, British Columbia seeks to extend her domain to the North Pole. In Great Britain, scientists are mulling over data gathered by the British Graham land expedition to the Antarctic.

Many reasons justify this sudden interest. The fabled northwest passage which Henry Hudson sought may yet be found in the Arctic sea. Aviation progress has made practical such long sustained flights as the two Moscow-California hops last summer. Moreover, who knows what valuable mineral deposits lie beneath the crust of ice and snow that covers Arctic lands?

Antarctic Land Discovered.

In the Antarctic, the recent British expedition discovered that Graham land is not an archipelago of islands as previously reported by Sir Hubert Wilkins, but one great tract of land—a peninsula of the Antarctic continent. Thus an immense tract has been added to the earth's known surface.

But it is the North pole which commands most interest because of its proximity to North America, Europe and Asia—a potential short-cut across the top of the world.

The Soviet's best scientists are now living in some 60 weather stations along the Arctic coast, helping push back the frontier and open the sea to ships—at least in summer.

Their observations are now supplemented by those of the ice-floe expedition, four scientists who landed near the pole last May and have since drifted slowly southward, to be picked up recently off the coast of Greenland.

Submarines Enter Picture.

Moscow has announced that eventually it will establish a series of weather observatories and landing fields along the proposed polar airway between Russia and the United States. From these vantage points the Soviet will study geography of the Arctic with airplanes, while submarines dive under the ice crust to explore the frigid seas below.

Dr. Ruth Gruber, an American newspaper correspondent, recently visited the Siberian north which formerly existed only as a home of living death for Czarist political prisoners. Even today the Stalinist government is probably using part of Siberia as a prison for victims of its atrocious purges, but Dr. Gruber found other portions of this vast expanse buzzing with industry.

America has been slow to appreciate the possibilities of Alaska. Her first concrete step was the removal of farmers from sub-marginal American lands to more fertile Alaskan soil several years ago. But she has done little more.

Today, when airways span every continent, there is still no regularly scheduled line between the United States and Alaska, although the Alaskans themselves are more air-minded than their brothers in the states. Last year more than 20,000 residents of the territory made trips by air—almost one-fourth of the entire population! Alaskans realize their territory can be conquered for year-around exploitation only by air.

Private Radio Stations.

In the entire territory there are 21 private radio stations, of which Pacific Alaska Airways (a Pan-American subsidiary) maintains 13, used solely for weather reporting to supplement the present totally insufficient federal service. The United States bureau of air commerce will soon establish modern radio stations at Juneau and Fairbanks, which is the first step in helping conquer America's portion of the frozen north.

Meanwhile, to the immediate east, British Columbia is suffering from growing pains and Premier T. D. Pattullo wants to push its borders to the North pole. Contingent upon agreement with the dominion government, the annexation would include all of Yukon territory and part of Mackenzie, including half the radium-producing Great Bear lake.

Such a territory would give British

BELOW—Every iceberg that menaces shipping in the northern seas was once part of the mighty Polar ice cap, which has drifted southward with so many exploration parties, including the recent Russian expedition under Commander Panapin.

Gulf Stream at Work.

It is already known that they found a layer of warm water near the North pole, caused by meanderings of the tepid Gulf stream. And, despite the general belief that the Arctic is devoid of life, they had frequent animal visitors.

Many obstacles must be overcome before commercial air routes can be mapped over the Arctic, although aviators used to northern flights claim the atmosphere is much clearer and more favorable for flying than in temperate zones. The biggest aviation obstacle is impracticability of compass devices based on the sun, since the Arctic has no sun part of the year.

But the day may come when Londoners bound for San Francisco or the Orient can fly with perfect safety and comfort via the short-cut route, over the top of the world.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

BETTE DAVIS is still trying to live up to the reputation she made for herself by her performance in "Of Human Bondage," and in "Jezebel" she does pretty well.

Furthermore, she shows as much courage in playing the heroine as she did in that other success—for once again she has a decidedly unsympathetic role.

"Jezebel" is a good picture, with a good cast, and an assortment of Southern accents that's something to hear. It's the first of a collection of Civil war pictures—or rather, pictures with a Civil war background—which will include "The Unvanquished," and "Action in Aquila" as well as "Gone With the Wind," provided they ever get around to making that last one!

Remember all the to-do about whether Paulette Goddard would or would not land the role of "Scarlett" in that same "Gone With the Wind?" Well, after signing a long-term contract with David Selznick she was assigned to a co-starring role with Janet Gaynor in "The Young in Heart," which ought to make a delightful picture. And, speaking of the talented Janet, discussions of those Academy awards still echo from the hills about Hollywood. Lots of people thought the little Gaynor ought to receive one of the awards for her performance in "A Star Is Born." In fact, they got pretty sentimental about it, because she won the Academy award for the year's best performance way back in 1927, for her work in "Seventh Heaven."

You'll certainly want to see Deanna Durbin in "Mad About Music." There you have a plot, a delightful one, perfectly suited to the talents of the youthful star, and with a grand part for Herbert Marshall which he handles expertly. In fact, it's a grand picture all the way through, with the young Deanna singing a popular number, "I Love to Whistle," as beautifully as she does Gounod's "Ave Maria."

Graham McNamee celebrates 15 years of broadcasting, this spring, though he feels perfectly certain that he hasn't been at it that long. But it actually was 15 years ago that he went into the office of a New York station looking for a job. He's been busy ever since—hasn't been without a commercial program since they first were put on the air.

Peter van Steeden is having a lot of fun with a new recording device. When his friends telephone him, he records their voices, and then telephones them later and plays the record back to them.

It's funny, the way that radio audiences are classified. For instance, Haven MacQuarrie's "Do You Want to Be an Actor?" program was considered just right for an automobile company that wanted to plug the sales of used cars—the program was said to have strong middle-class appeal.

ODDS and ENDS . . . That new Tim and Irene show is going great guns . . . May be one of the most popular radio programs of its kind before long . . . Jane Withers has a new trailer which she uses as a dressing room . . . Stan Laurel had to get a new derby for "Swiss Miss"; the one he'd been using for twelve years fell to pieces . . . How'd you like to earn your living by supplying bugs, butterflies and insects to a motion picture studio? A man in Hollywood does it . . . Radio's Voice of Experience was an automobile salesman for thirty days, before he became the Voice of Experience, and averaged a sale a day . . . If you hear Mary Livingston getting mixed up in her lines on that Jack Benny broadcast you'll know that she had something to eat usually she doesn't eat at all on Sundays until the program's over . . . For one scene in "Holiday" Katherine Hepburn had to run up a fifty-two step stairway; she did it nine times in succession . . . And was Cary Grant glad that the script arranged to have him walk.

What Is the Cause of "Spider-Web Check"?

If not properly "fed" with a good oil polish, furniture in time develops what is known as "spider-web check!" This appears on the finish, like wrinkles on the human face—fine lines, spreading here and there in a spider-web pattern. This crazing, this light cracking, is known in furniture language as "checking" and "spider-web checking" better describes the condition. This is the danger-signal, on finish! It's the indication of "starving" wood! A warning to the housewife, that if the finish is not cared for immediately and properly, the furniture will develop cracks, ridges and splits. "Spider-web check" is generally the result of either one of these two causes: Polish-neglect—or the use of a poor, cheap polish—without the essential fine, light-oil base. When the furniture is periodically "massaged" with a reputable oil polish (the best is non-greasy), the pores of the wood are "fed" and the piece is preserved. Then "spider-web check" will not appear! The use of a quality oil polish is the best preventive formula for this ugly, detrimental check!

Basque Dress for Girls.

No wonder girls love a basque dress like this! The fitted waist with its basque point in front gives them such a grown-up feeling. The full skirt, square neckline and puff sleeves are so becoming. Make this dress up for your daughter in taffeta or silk crepe in time for Easter, and later on in printed percale or dimity.

Large Women's Dress.

The diagram shows you how easy this dress is to make, and it fits to perfection. Notice the raglan shoulder line, the waistline snugged in by darts. The roll collar, with the smart little tab in front, is very soft and becoming. Very comfortable to work round the house in, this dress is sufficiently tailored so that you can go shopping in it, too. Make it up in percale, gingham, broadcloth or tub silk.

The Patterns.

1491 is designed for sizes 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Size 8 requires 2½ yards of 39-inch material, plus 1½ yards of bias fold to finish the neckline and sleeves.

1395 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material. For contrasting collar, ½ yard, cut bias.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart

TIPS to Gardeners

Combinations

TO INCREASE yield from the vegetable plot, the home gardener should grow "combined cultures."

The theory is to plant in closely spaced adjacent rows vegetables harvested at widely different times, using one before the other begins to mature.

Combine cauliflower, lettuce and radish, for instance. Plant cauliflower early in rows three feet apart. Between the rows plant lettuce, and between lettuce and cauliflower rows plant radish. Radishes are harvested early, then the lettuce, and later the cauliflower.

Following are several other combinations recommended by Harold Coulter, Ferry Seed Institute vegetable expert:

Carrots and parsnips in alternate rows two feet apart; radishes between first two rows; lettuce between second and third rows, and spinach between third and fourth rows.

Spinach rows two and one-half feet apart; radishes between spinach; pepper plants set between spinach when radishes are pulled.

Art Work Helps in the Building Up of Mental Health

By MARJORIE VAN DE WATER

New York. — Paintings of modern schools of art and those by the mentally deranged are likely to be repulsive to many judging their aesthetic merit.

But such artistic presentations have their value nevertheless. To the psychiatrist, for example, the aesthetic qualities of a painting may be of least importance.

The physician of sick minds has come to realize that through the medium of brush and canvas, a tortured soul can find release for his emotions, a lessening of tensions and anxieties and a bridge for the unreal realm of his imaginings to reality.

And a naughty boy who draws in the back of his geography a caricature of his stern teacher lets off steam which otherwise might result in an emotional explosion.

Children treated by psychiatrists for emotional disorders are encouraged to make such drawings of teacher and parent, because they not only relieve their minds but also reveal to the psychiatrist the youngsters' individual worries and suppressed troubles.

Size, Design and Color. Dr. Edward Liss, New York physician, tells in the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry what the psychiatrist looks for as significant in the paintings of children and adults.

In the first place, size is significant as revealing inner attitudes. It is related to the individual's evaluation of his own ego.

Next the design or pattern is important. Good technique in all kinds of art is the result of a certain balance between natural impulses and certain censoring agents which tend to bring them within approved limits or patterns. The more fixed the pattern, the more geometric the designs, the greater are the repressions within the individual.

Color choice is important. Brown and black, for example, are associated particularly with deep unconscious components of a depressive nature, Dr. Liss has found.

Finally the finished work is interpreted in much the same way that dreams are analyzed. Preference for some subjects and evasion of others indicates to the trained student the emotional impasses and fixation points of the artist.

Supercharging Diesels Brings Gains in Power

Washington. — Supercharging of giant Diesel engines on motorships at sea offers two benefits for marine commerce and naval vessels, said E. D. Newell of the bureau of engineering, Navy department, in an address here at a joint meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Society of Automotive Engineers.

In naval ships, Mr. Newell indicated, supercharging enables the same engines to turn out valuable extra power for special short time operation in emergencies. In commercial marine installation, supercharging permits a motorship to use smaller engines, thus having more cargo space but obtaining the same speed. Or the cargo space can be kept the same and the speed increased.

By supercharging Diesel engines on the new streamlined railroad trains, additional power gains have been achieved which, in one case have amounted to 50 per cent power increase for continuous operation.

Mr. Newell reviewed the use of supercharging in Diesel engines for aircraft and pointed out that such supercharging not only permits greater power for the size and weight of engine but makes possible engine performance at higher altitudes where the air is rarefied.

Fire Ants Destroy Quail in Southeastern States

Baltimore. — Enemies of quail are usually thought of in terms of foxes, rats, occasionally owls. But in the quail territory of the Southeast a species of ant, the fire ant, has to be taken into the reckoning as an important cause of quail life destruction, reported Bernard V. Travis of the bureau of entomology and plant quarantine, United States Department of Agriculture, speaking here before the annual North American Wildlife conference.

These ferocious swarming insects attack the eggs as soon as they have been piped, or the newly hatched quail chicks while they are still helpless. The voracious insects kill from 4 to 16 per cent of the quail hatch each year. They are also serious enemies of citrus fruit trees.

It is very difficult to combat these ants. They detect even small concentrations of poison in baits, and fumigants are costly. Dry sodium cyanide seems to be the most promising means of control.

Six Pairs of Twins in One Family Are Puzzle for Scientists

Chicago. — The six pairs of fraternal twins that have been born to a Connecticut husband and wife are somewhat disturbing to scientists.

Prof. William Walter Greulich, of the department of anatomy and the adolescent study unit at Yale university, presents a study of the six pairs of twins in the Connecticut family in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

He has also looked into the family history of the twins' parents. Only on the father's side can a record of previous multiple births be found. The father's father, it turns out, had triplets by his second wife.

The widespread belief that twinning tends to run in families is supported by evidence here and abroad, and twin births everywhere seem to appear just as frequently on the father's side as on the mother's. Now this disturbing fact cannot be reconciled with the accepted theory of the genesis of fraternal twins.

Fraternal twins, as distinguished from monozygotic twins (those of the same sex and physical characteristics), are produced, it is usually assumed, by the fertilization of two ova derived from separate follicles either from the same or from different ovaries.

Calls for Observations. Such double ovulations are exceptional and are generally regarded as the result of some upset in function of the ovulatory mechanism. The control of this would naturally be with the mother and could not possibly be influenced by the father.

Professor Greulich appeals to surgeons and pathologists to make observations during operations and postmortems on pregnant women that will help find a satisfactory explanation of this phenomenon.

The most reasonable explanation, in his opinion, was advanced 20 years ago by Dr. C. H. Danforth and recently by Dr. F. Curtius of Germany.

According to this hypothesis, the sperm of some men causes the tubal ovum to form two cells, both of which are susceptible of being fertilized, each, of course, by a different sperm. Such fertilization would result in the production of twins who had the same heredity from the mother's side but different paternal heredity.

Such twins might be of like or of unlike sex and would presumably be intermediate between identical and ordinary double-egg twins in the degree of resemblance that they would bear to each other.

The Connecticut family, which has renewed the faith of physicians that phenomenal fecundity has not become a lost art, had its sixth pair of twins last June 12. The mother was thirty-five and the father fifty-seven when they were born.

Of the first pair of twins the boy died, but all others are living. Two pairs are of the same sex but do not resemble each other closely.

California Diamonds Do Not Justify a "Rush"

Washington. — "Recent diamond finds at Cherokee Flats, near Camino, Calif., do not justify any rush to the area in search of easily-gotten glittering stones," says Dr. R. A. Foshag, curator of minerals at the National museum here. "We receive at the museum one diamond from the Cherokee Flats region every three or four years. Perhaps two hundred diamonds have been found in California since the gold rush days, the largest reported being about seven carats."

The Cherokee Flats diamonds, explains Dr. Foshag, are perfectly good stones, their rarity, rather than any defect in them, making the placer gold deposits unprofitable as diamond mines. Near the creeks is a dike of serpentine rock from which the diamonds are believed to have been freed by weathering during many thousands of years. Working this dike for diamonds would cost much more in labor than it could ever produce in diamonds, he believes.

Larger Army Airplanes Have Many New Devices

Washington. — Four hundred and ten airplanes delivered by manufacturers to the United States army during the calendar year 1937 were twice as large as their immediate predecessors, Brig. Gen. A. W. Robins, chief of the materials division, declared here.

Scores of new devices, tested and found satisfactory, have been made standard equipment on new planes, while a systematic testing program is leading to important improvements in military craft.

The materials division is sponsoring tests of a novel set of propellers, one mounted immediately in front of the other on concentric propeller shafts, General Robins revealed. The propellers rotate in opposite directions. Controllable pitch concentric propellers are now being designed, he added.

Tires and tubes which will seal themselves after being punctured by bullets are under development. Army engineers are studying a device which automatically brings back a badly operating machine gun into full operation.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

By REV. HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, Dean of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, © Western Newspaper Union.

Lesson for April 17

THE VICTORIOUS SERVANT (Easter)

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2:22-35. GOLDEN TEXT—This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses.—Acts 2:32.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter's First Sermon. JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter's Greatest Sermon. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Winning with the Victorious Christ. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Risen Christ Our Hope of Victory

"Up from the grave He arose With a mighty triumph o'er His foes. He arose a Victor from the dark domain. And He lives forever with His saints to reign; He arose! He arose! Hallelujah! Christ arose!"

Let the glad chorus swell the good tidings that the One who humbled Himself to become the servant of all is the "Victorious Servant"—yes, the Victorious Lord!

Easter is the great holiday—a real holy day of the Christian church. We rejoice in the incarnation, for only as the Son of God identified Himself with the human race could He bear our sins on Calvary's tree. We keep the cross before us, for only as He died did He make a monument for our sin, but above all we observe the resurrection, for had He not risen for our justification we would indeed have been without any hope. Ours is a resurrection faith; let us live it in resurrection power.

Life is so serious in its responsibilities and burdens, so often disappointing in its trials and sorrows, that we need to sound the note of victory. But it must be real victory and it must be assured at the crucial point where all the hopes of man find defeat—at death. Only the Christian has the assurance of victory there, but, thank God, he does really have it in our Lord Jesus Christ.

Turning aside from our studies in the Gospel of Mark for today we consider together the sermon of Peter on the day of Pentecost. He declares Jesus to be:

I. Approved by Mighty Works (v. 22).

Theories may have validity only to the man who accepts the authority of the one who proclaims them, but facts are stubborn things, the reality of which no man can deny. There are those who speak about the Lord Jesus as though we asked them to accept Him on the basis of our claims for Him as the Son of God. They forget the facts of history—from the hundreds of years before His incarnation when the prophets spoke of His coming, down through the account of His earthly life, death, and resurrection to which we may well add the inescapable argument of Christianity as it stands in the world today—all speak of Him as the Son of God.

II. Delivered Up to Die (v. 23).

The cross was not an accident. Jesus did not die as a martyr to a noble but hopeless cause. He came into the world "to give his life a ransom for many" (Matt. 20:28). He said, "I lay down my life. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again" (John 10:17, 18).

But the fact that the cross was in the eternal plan of God in no way justifies those who slew Him. Though they were fulfilling the divine purpose, they were acting as free moral agents fully responsible for their wicked deeds.

III. Raised Up by God (vv. 24-32).

"It was not possible that he should be holden" of death (v. 24)—what a beautifully final and positive statement. It was an impossibility that Christ should remain in the grave, and it is the absolute assurance of Scripture that we who "be dead with him shall also live with him" (II Tim. 2:11). To the believer, the one who is in Christ, the resurrection of the Saviour is the guarantee that we shall be raised. Christ is the first-fruits of them that sleep in the grave. (I Cor. 15:20.)

Peter in his sermon turns to the Scriptures to prove the resurrection referring to the prophet Joel as well as to the Psalms of David. It would be well for us to do likewise on this Easter Sunday of 1938, for we have infinitely richer resources, for in our hands is the New Testament with the story of the resurrection and all the references of the epistles to this glorious truth.

IV. Ascended and Exalted (v. 33).

"Look, ye saints! The sight is glorious. See the Man of Sorrows now; From the fight returned victorious. Every knee to Him shall bow: Crown Him! Crown Him! Crowns become the Victor's brow." "He humbled himself... Wherefore God hath highly exalted him" (Phil. 2:8, 9). Read Philippians 2:5-11 as a fitting close to this glorious lesson.

Gaining Knowledge

"More knowledge of God's Word will be gained by a single effort to obey one of His commandments than by a year of reading with no effort to keep the Word of God."

Ask Me Another

A General Quiz

1. How many watts in the bulb on top of the Edison Memorial tower?
2. Do animals grow during hibernation?
3. What is the average per capita savings of inhabitants in the United States?
4. Does all ice float?
5. What per cent of persons enrolled in schools attend public institutions?
6. What is the difference between green and black tea?

The Answers

1. The bulb is of 5,200 watts, and is 14 feet high.
2. They do not grow. All body activity is at low ebb.
3. In the year ended June 30, 1937, it was $191.
4. Ice that sank resulted when Harvard scientists recently froze water under a pressure of 30,000 pounds to the square inch. Ordinary pressure is 14½ pounds.
5. Approximately 90 per cent of all persons enrolled in school go to public educational institutions and 10 per cent to private schools.
6. The difference is not in the tea plant but in the processing method. The leaves selected for black teas undergo a fermentation which changes their color and flavor. Leaves for green tea are dried without being fermented.

Chair Set of Filet Crochet

Pattern 5975.

"Such lovely lace!" your friends will exclaim and they'll never guess how little it cost! You'll want to gather up crochet hook and some string and begin at once on this charming chair or buffet set and pillow to match.

Quickly and easily done in filet crochet, the peacocks and roses are pretty "set off" by an open mesh. Practical—lasting—exquisite, the chairback may be repeated and used as scarf ends. They all make splendid gifts. In pattern 5975 you will find complete instructions and charts for making the set and pillow top shown; illustrations of all stitches used; material requirements.

To obtain this pattern send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, 259 W. 14th St., New York City.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Noted Food Authority

Relates the Miracle of VITAMINS and Explains Why YOU MUST EAT THEM or DIE

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th St., New York.

WE LIVE in the most inspiring age the world has ever known. Chemists grow plants without soil. Doctors snatch men from death with insulin. Surgeons perform incredibly delicate brain operations. And thanks to the amazing discoveries of nutritional scientists, children enter the world with far better chances for long and happy lives, while men and women of seventy are more active and useful than their grandparents were at fifty.

Much of the hard-won knowledge of how to eat so as to increase efficiency, curb disease, and improve the chances for longevity is due to the discovery of vitamins.

VITAMINS DISCOVERED

Twenty-six years ago, a now-famous scientist walked nervously around his laboratory, back and forth—back and forth. He was conducting a nutrition experiment of vast importance. He didn't quite know what he was going to find, but he believed that he was on the verge of a revolutionary food discovery.

The scientist was my friend, Casimir Funk, a brilliant Polish bio-chemist. He had been working on the problem for many years. At last, in the year 1912, his experiments were positive and conclusive. Then he announced to the scientific world that he had discovered a vital force. "This force," said Funk, "I have called vitamin, because it is necessary to life."

Thus, the word "vitamin" came into being, along with the first knowledge of these minute but powerful factors which exert such a tremendous influence on human health and happiness.

SPARK PLUGS OF NUTRITION

Other bio-chemists throughout the world—including Sir Frederick Gowland Hopkins in England, and Hart, Humphrey, Babcock, Steenbock and McCollum in the United States—had been working on the same problem that Funk had partially solved. They knew that the first step was to find out how vitamins affected the human body, and that the second step was to discover what foods contained these vital substances.

And so there began a long series of experiments in the laboratories of great universities all over the world, which demonstrated what happens when a diet is deficient in any of the vitamins, and proved that if laboratory animals are wholly deprived of vitamins for a short time they will die.

These experiments are of the utmost significance to every homemaker, because the same thing happens to human beings as to experimental animals. Today our knowledge of vitamins has progressed to such a degree that it is possible to state the exact requirement for most of the vitamins and to designate the foods from which adequate quantities can be obtained.

RESISTANCE AND VITAMIN A

To date, six vitamins have been identified. Vitamin A promotes growth and builds resistance to disease. It is necessary for the health of the mucous membranes of the body and helps to guard against infections of the respiratory and alimentary tracts. It influences the health of the hair and skin, is necessary to prevent a serious eye disorder known as night blindness, and is essential for the formation of healthy teeth.

Vitamin A is found in milk, butter, margarine that has been reinforced with vitamin A concentrate, egg yolk, cod-liver oil, thin green leaves and yellow fruits and vegetables such as carrots, sweet potatoes, apricots and bananas.

APPETITE AND VITAMIN B

Vitamin B promotes appetite, aids digestion, prevents a serious nerve disorder. It is essential to the maintenance of a good digestion, which is vitally important if the body is to obtain full benefit from the food consumed. This vitamin is closely related to the energy metabolism, and the requirement increases with the rate of growth and with increased energy expenditure, so that growing children and working men and women should receive very generous amounts.

Vitamin B is found in yeast, whole wheat cereals, oatmeal, milk, fresh and dried peas and beans, spinach, cabbage and other greens, egg yolk and liver.

VITAMIN C FOR TEETH, GUMS

Vitamin C plays an important part in regulating body processes, and prevents the dread disease of scurvy. A lack of this essential vitamin results in profound changes in the structure of the teeth and gums, may be responsible for hemorrhages occurring anywhere in the body, and for the degeneration of muscle fibers generally.

Vitamin C is most abundant in succulent fresh green leaves, such as green cabbage. It is also found in onions, potatoes, oranges, tomatoes, green peppers, bananas and strawberries.

VITAMIN D AND RICKETS

Vitamin D is sometimes called the sunshine vitamin because it can be manufactured in the body through the action of direct sunlight on the skin. This is the vitamin that is necessary for the proper utilization of calcium and phosphorus in building bones and teeth. When it is lacking in the diet of infants, there develops that horrible disease known as rickets, in which the bones become soft and twisted, resulting in pitiful deformities—knock knees, bow legs, pigeon breast.

In foods, vitamin D is only found in appreciable amounts in fish-liver oils and egg yolk. That is why every homemaker should be so grateful to the scientists who labored to discover how to concentrate this precious vitamin from fish-liver oils and add it to foods, or to increase the vitamin D content of foods through irradiation.

ANTI-STERILITY VITAMIN E

Vitamin E comes in for less discussion than the others, because its significance to nutrition has not been fully determined. It does, however, appear to be necessary for successful reproduction and is found especially in wheat germ and lettuce.

VITAMIN G PROLONGS YOUTH

Vitamin G is necessary for growth and for the maintenance of health and vigor at all ages. It helps to ward off old age by prolonging the vigorous middle years. It is essential to the health of the skin, and recent experiments demonstrate that cataracts in the eyes may be due to a deficiency of this vitamin, which is found in yeast, and in liver, kidneys, egg yolk, milk, cheese and green leafy vegetables.

Certainly enough has been learned of vitamin chemistry to make clear that the homemaker fails in her duty who does not provide vitamins in abundance for every member of her family. Both children and adults depend upon you for their food supply. It lies within your power to help them to health and happiness or condemn them to weakness, illness and sorrow. Do not fail them. See to it that every member of your household—your children, the wage earners, the middle aged and the elderly—get enough vitamins to afford them the health that science has placed within their grasp.

The First Easter

...and it's message.

"NOW, WHEN the even was come, He sat down with the twelve... and, as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said: take, eat; this is my body. And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying: Drink ye all of it... This do in remembrance of me..."

And so, on that fateful night before the first Good Friday had dawned came the Last Supper of Our Lord and His Disciples.

The message in His teachings, though sometimes misinterpreted and even distorted, remains everlasting. Nothing else, in all of human history, has had such influence for decency and goodwill among men. Nothing else has provided such a living inspiration, bringing hope and courage to the hearts of countless millions.

His message shall never die; the message of The Gentle Nazarene who perished on the Cross; that those verities which men live by might not perish from the earth.

"...This do in remembrance of me."! In an extended sense, those immortal words of The Master, ringing down the corridors of time, might well be heard to echo a special message to our own Profession!

Solicitude for those poor souls bowed down with the grief of bereavement: this was ever a tender care of Him who died at Calvary. And today, in our own humble way, it is a privilege for us to bring, through our work as funeral directors, some measure of comfort to those who are burdened with sorrow and grief.

Rain Failed To Dampen Spirit Of First Egg Hunt

EASTER EGG HUNT SUCCESSFUL DESPITE RAINY WEATHER

First Hunt Drew Large Crowd Of Children To Town

Despite overcast skies and occasional showers Saturday afternoon there was a crowd of around seventy-five or eighty children in town to take part in the Easter Egg Hunt, the first ever to be staged in Klemme.

On account of the rain the egg hiding committee was forced to change their plans and so used the Northern Lumber Co. building in which to place the eggs, and it was there that the children went to find their colored and prize eggs.

The committees had prepared for over two hundred children. The surplus eggs were distributed to nearby school houses Tuesday.

However, the committees working on the project decided that it was successful and will go ahead with plans for next year, when they hope for good weather for the egg hunt.

STATE PARKS READY FOR USE

About this time of the year one's thoughts turn to the great open spaces. It seems that almost everyone wants to go places and enjoy the warm spring air, the budding trees, wild flowers and Nature in her glory. Iowa's state parks and preserves will satisfy that urge. That is the reason for their establishment, so you will have a place to go and satisfy that desire.

Iowa's 72 state parks and preserves are now ready for the visiting public. Some of these areas are not complete with picnic areas, tables and other facilities but most of them are ready for your enjoyment.

In the meantime visit Iowa's parks and see for yourself the cozy cabins which have been built by the CCC boys. Note the many comforts afforded and the enjoyable surroundings. A pleasant place for your family to spend its vacation.

Visit these areas now, if only to see the flowers, trees and scenic beauty. It is worth your trip next Sunday. See the lakes and streams while they sparkle in the warm sunshine. You have the urge to get outdoors and the Conservation Commission has provided places for you to go. They are your parks, use them to the fullest extent. Iowa is known throughout the United States as having the finest, most up to date and interesting state parks.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. When are sweet sorghums regarded as having matured?

A. Sweet sorghums will be regarded as matured when the seed has matured, without regard as to how the crop is used. That is, if the seed is allowed to mature and the fodder is then cut and shocked and fed to cattle, it will be classified as depleting just the same as though it had been threshed.

Q. Can Atlas sorghum be cut with the binder, used for forage (not silage) before the maturity of seed and be classified as a non-depleting crop?

A. Yes.

Q. Which sorghums are classified as grain sorghums.

A. Milo (all strains), Feterita (all strains), Durra (all strains), Kafir (all strains), Hegari, Kaoling (all strains), Grohoma, Ajax, Chiltek, Kalo, Early Kalo, Premo, Schrock, Sagrain, Darso, Shallu, Freed (all strains), Groff, Fredoka, Coes.

Q. Which sorghums are classified as sweet sorghums?

A. Atlas (commonly known as Atlas Sorgo), Sumac (all strains—commonly known as red top cane), Amber (all strains), Orange Sorgo (all strains—commonly known as orange cane), Honey (sometimes known as Japanese Ribbon Cane), Gooseneck (sometimes known as Texas Seeded Ribbon Cane), White African, Sourless (commonly known as African Millet and sometimes known as White Orange), Leoti Red, Collier, McLean, Denton, Planter, Folger, Dwarf Ashburn (commonly known as Dutch Boy), Tricker, Sapling, Red X (commonly known as Rex), Colman (commonly known as Red Orange), Fremont.

Q. Must fall wheat that is pastured and not allowed to mature grain, have a new seeding to classify as non-depleting?

A. No, if pastured before May 1 and pastured sufficiently there after to prevent grain formation.

Q. What is the difference between the "total soil depleting," acreage allotment and "general" soil depleting acreage allotment?

A. "Total acreage" allotment minus the sum of special acreages allotments, such as corn, and sugar beet acreage, equals "general" acreage.

Q. Is the increase of small payments made on a basis of the payment per farm or the payment per person when divided between landlord and tenant?

A. The increase in small payments is computed on the basis of the payments per person where they are divided between the landlord and tenant.

Q. Since one ton of lime equals one unit of soil-building practices, would I get credit for three units if I spread 3 tons of lime over one acre?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I plant popcorn and not have it count against my corn allotment?

A. Popcorn will be considered as corn if it is fed as fodder, silage, hogged down, or the grain fed.

ROY SMOCK MARRIED TO WATERLOO LADY SATURDAY EVENING

Couple Will Make Their Home Here In Klemme

Gladys Van Syoc, Waterloo, and Roy Smock, Klemme, were united in marriage at seven thirty o'clock on Saturday evening, April 16th at the parsonage of the Linden Methodist Church at Waterloo by the Rev. Roscoe B. Sires. The couple were attended by a nephew of Mr. Smock, Mr. Ronald Geisler and wife, both of Waterloo.

A number of relatives of the contracting parties had gathered at the parsonage and witnessed the ceremony.

A wedding dinner was served Sunday by a sister of the bride, Mrs. Trueman Comber, and was attended by about twenty-five relatives of the bride and groom.

The bride is an accomplished musician and was an active worker in the church at Waterloo. She was employed in a real estate office at Waterloo. Mr. Smock has been a resident of Klemme since 1925, prior to that time having lived at Britt. He is employed at the North Iowa Grain Co.

Monday evening a large number of friends gathered at the Smock home and gave the newlyweds the customary charivari, which of course, produced the treats.

Mr. and Mrs. Smock are living with his parents in the northeast part of town.

SHAMROCK PITCHING ACE INJURED IN GOODELL GAME

Genie Kluckhohn, star pitcher for the Klemme Shamrocks, was seriously injured in a baseball game at Goodell last Wednesday afternoon. Genie was on third base and was dashing for home plate when he collided with Raymond Hofer, Goodell catcher, breaking both bones in his right leg above the ankle. The accident happened in the sixth inning. Goodell leading 12 to 8, after which the game was called off.

Genie was taken to the Hampton hospital for X-Rays and to have the fracture reduced. He was brought to his home Thursday where he is recovering.

The accident will handicap the Shamrocks as Kluckhohn, a south paw, was rated as one of the best pitchers in the conference. The Shamrocks' reserve pitching staff lacks experience.

SENIORS TO PRESENT CLASS PLAY THURSDAY AND FRIDAY, APRIL 28-29

In this issue of the Times, the class of 1938 announces its class play, "Another Spring". It is a romantic comedy-drama by Priscilla Wayne and Wayne Sprague. Elaborate costuming and quaint settings will combine with the natural ability of members of this year's class to make this one of the most classic and pleasing performances ever attempted here.

This play contains a prologue and a play proper. The prologue takes place 150 years ago during the Revolutionary War. David Lee, the lover of Nancy Carlisle, goes to war on the side of the colonies and is mortally wounded. He comes home as he is dying. Before he went to war, he and Nancy had severed the ring and each took half of it. On Nancy's half is written "there shall be", and on David's half is written "another spring". As David dies he gives his half to his brother who is to pass it to his children and on down through the generations. Nancy gives her ring to her sister's child who passes it on, too.

The play proper takes place in the house where David Lee died, but which has since been turned into an inn. Nancy Allen, who is a descendant of Nancy Carlisle and possesses the half-ring, is going to marry Nelson Browning, a wealthy Englishman, and they, with her mother are visiting this place. They decide to be married there.

David Madison is a young man who stays at the inn. He is a descendant of David Lee and he has the other half of the ring. He is to be the best man at the wedding. Naturally this is a very dramatic situation. To learn the outcome, attend the senior class play to be given April 28th and 29th.

The cast of characters for the play is as follows and the prologue will see Elmer Trampel, as David Lee, a colonial soldier; Doris Barz, as Nancy Carlisle, in love with David Lee; Irene Spittler as Mrs. Carlisle, a Tory, Nancy Carlisle's mother, and Verner Lau as Benjamin Lee, a colonial soldier, David Lee's brother.

In the play proper the characters are as follows:

David Carlisle Madison, a descendant of the Lee family, Paul Schultdt; Nancy Allen, a descendant of the Carlisle family, Elaine Buntenschach; Mrs. Allen, Nancy Allen's mother, Novella Beier; Washington Crawford, servant at Carlisle Inn, Raymond Wille; Sugar Johnson, servant at Carlisle Inn, Juanita Pavey; Miss Pendergast, owner of Carlisle Inn, Avis Barz; Nelson Browning, Nancy Allen's fiance, Ray Jorgenson Jr.; Gay Stevens, in love with David Madison, Gladys Griffen; Dr. Morden, a minister, Glenn Lewis; Maria, maid of Nancy Allen, Eloise Etchen; Liza, cook at Carlisle Inn, Ruth Blickenderfer; Extras, guests at Carlisle Inn, Elmer Trampel, Doris Barz, Irene Spittler, Verner Lau, Eloise Etchen.

HELLO, FOLKS!

A seven and one-half pound baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Thada, Tuesday morning, April 19th, at a Mason City hospital.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—The coming primary campaigns for Democratic nominations to the senate and house of representatives are apparently going to be loaded with more than the usual amount of political dynamite. There are three or four reasons for this and, as viewed from the capital, any of them is worth watching for the color of the results.

First, I should say these Democratic campaigns are due to show just about how far President Roosevelt can go in dictating party nominations and to develop reprisals against those Democrats who prefer democracy to the New Deal. This phase of the political picture, of course, will have a bearing on the 1940 Democratic National convention. It may be the beginning, therefore, of a battle in which the Democrats will strive to recapture their party machinery from the Roosevelt-New Deal wing of the party.

Second, the campaign may possibly disclose to what extent there can be a coalition among those opposed to the New Deal. The coalition idea has been gaining some followers under the leadership of Senator Vandenberg, Michigan Republican, but it must be said in truth that it has a long way to go. Southern Democrats never will vote for a Republican label and there are many sections of the north where the Democratic label is just as poisonous to the Republican voters.

Third, the bitterness that is bound to show up in some of the fights for the Democratic nomination should bring forth Republican spirit, if there be any Republican spirit, and thus it seems possible that factional strife among the Democrats might result in some sort of life being instilled into the opposition party. Carrying that thought a bit further, one might conjecture that this paradox of politics will reveal whether the Republicans have honest-to-goodness leaders anywhere among them.

Primaries for the nomination of candidates for the house of representatives will be held in all states during the spring and summer, excepting only Connecticut, Rhode Island, Delaware and New Mexico. In those four states, the nominations are made in state conventions. Senatorial nominations will be made in primaries excepting the four states named above and in New York and Indiana. New York and Indiana will have state conventions, and in Indiana, particularly, I am informed that a rousing battle is in sight because of President Roosevelt's determination to get rid of Senator Van Nuys, who has sidled away from the New Deal and has taken his position as a Democrat. The fight on Senator Van Nuys started when he fought the President's plan to add six new judges to the Supreme court and it has grown in heat constantly since.

So, from now on we may expect to see more and more of the boys stand up and be counted, either as out-and-out New Dealers or as out-and-out Democrats who stand with the New Deal only when they believe the New Deal policy to be sound. It has been interesting to note the fairness with which some if not all the Democrats treat the New Deal antagonism. I do not know whether it is bred of a fear that Mr. Roosevelt still has a tremendous personal following or whether the New Deal philosophy and the Democratic philosophy coincide at many places. Suffice it to say that in the various speeches and announcements that have been forthcoming, new candidates for the Democratic nomination for house or senate have uniformly stuck to the promise that when Mr. Roosevelt is right, they will support him; when they think him wrong, they are prepared to oppose him.

One of the latest to announce a candidacy has been Rep. Worth Clark of Idaho. He is seeking the nomination from the Idaho Democrats for the senate seat now held by Sen. J. P. Pope. Those two men serve as an excellent illustration of the point I have tried to make. You can distinguish between them as a Democrat and a New Dealer, respectively. Senator Pope has backed up the President on everything and no questions asked; Mr. Clark takes the position and frequently has said so with a boldness and an independence worthy of Sen. Bill Borah of the same state, that he is "100 per cent for President Roosevelt when I believe the President's policies to be sound. When they are not sound, in my opinion, I shall oppose them just as vigorously as I would oppose moss-backed reactionary plans by Republicans."

Now, it may be said by some that Mr. Clark is relegating to himself a considerable amount of authority—the statement that when he thinks the President's plans are sour, he will oppose them. I take an entirely contrary view. The people of a state send a man to the house of representatives or the senate to serve as their spokesman, their leader. They don't want somebody to follow somebody else, or at least they should not want that type of man. If Mr. Clark feels that he has a better understanding of what is needed in the state from which he comes than does the President of the United States, I think he is only exercising his capacity and his right of leadership. Further, it is a test in the primary. The people are going to decide it and that is what commends it to me.

Using the Clark-Pope contest as further illustration, I think it ought to be said Mr. Clark must have discovered from keeping his ear to the Idaho political ground how the people of that state have been disturbed by some of the radical, professorial policies that have been "sold" to Mr. Roosevelt by his coterie of advisers. His record seems to indicate that such is the case. On the other hand, Senator Pope has never wavered. He has found out first what Mr. Roosevelt wanted and has stayed with that through thick and thin. It may be that a thick-and-thin stand is good politics; it may be that voters in many states prefer that. But the thought I am seeking to advance is the necessity for members of the house and senate to think sometimes of the welfare of their constituencies, the good of the country as a whole.

In the campaigns of 1934 and 1936, the bulk of the Democratic members of the house and senate went out and campaigned wholeheartedly for Roosevelt policies. There were fewer who sounded the tocsin in that way in 1936 than did in 1934. Which is to say, that some members found weaknesses in policies which they had supported and they admitted they were wrong. Well, the result has been fewer nit wit laws.

In addition to his other activities, the President of the United States is probably as busy as any man in the world, President Roosevelt is now in competition with the hundreds of men and women who make their living by writing. I refer, of course, to the publication in newspapers and magazines of his state papers and the serial story publication of his notes and comments and the questions asked in his regular semiweekly meetings with the newspaper correspondents.

The President's action in selling this material has created quite a furor. It has brought home to many writers a fact that has agitated me in a serious way. For the first time, many writers realized what has been happening to private business where the federal or state governments, especially the former, have entered into fields of commercial endeavor that heretofore had been reserved for private effort. Of course, the President is not "the government" as one might say in the case of running electric light plants or building houses or serving as a banker, but the material he is syndicating and for which he receives money is of the same fabric. It is so because it represents a record of an official in office. I find difficulty, therefore, in distinguishing between the two types and I am rather glad that the lesson is so pointed.

I have no idea how many thousands of dollars the sale of press conference notes will yield. My objection to their sale rests on another reason than the monetary return. That is, another reason in addition to the belief I hold that government should not enter into competition with private individuals. Let me state my objection by a review. It has always been required of the newspaper correspondents that the President could say anything he desired in the press conferences and it must be held in confidence and never printed unless the President gave permission for its use. Included in the records now being published, however, are many items never before published. They were held in confidence by the correspondents heretofore.

Another thing: a shorthand writer always sits at Mr. Roosevelt's left during the press conferences. He takes every question and every answer. The record is complete. But the correspondents always have been denied the privilege of re-examining those shorthand notes or, rather, the transcribed records. They were held as the President's personal property. Nevertheless, the syndicated newspaper stories and the magazine articles and the volumes of state papers now in process of publication use those very records in a most complete form. The President has added his comments to many of them. It makes a most interesting record—but the three or four hundred Washington correspondents who make their living as professional writers have had no chance to increase their own emoluments or to make their own writings more important by writing the material which is now being disclosed for the first time.

The house she has just bought in New Jersey, near Flemington, is an instance. It's very old, and she's having the usual trouble with modeling, which never goes too enough. But she's also having adventures with it.

For instance, some 12 coats of paint had been put on the dining room, during all the years—when they were removed beautiful old pine paneling was discovered beneath.

She's been vacationing in Yosemite, but will go to work soon in the screen version of "You Can't Take It With You," the delightful play which has been having such a long run on the New York stage.

Gene Autrey is another star who has been having difficulties with his studio. In his case it was just a little matter of money.

Remember the fuss when John Charles Thomas refused to broadcast if he couldn't finish with "Good night, Mother"? Well, that same kind of trouble bobbed up on the Fibber McGee and Molly program and the rules of the broadcasting company were broken.

Fibber was ending with "Good night, Molly," and was told he couldn't do it any more. But—"Molly" is the name of a character in the show, explained the sponsors, as it might logically belong there. In real life, "Molly" is the wife of Jim Jordan, the man who plays "Fibber McGee," and is just recovering from a long illness.

Lesson for April 24

RECEIVING VISION FOR SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9 2-10.
GOLDEN TEXT—This is my beloved Son: hear him.—Mark 9 7.
PRIMARY TOPIC—On a Mountain with Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—With Jesus on a Mountain Top.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Worship Prepares Us for Service.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Place and Purpose of Vision.

"Where there is no vision the people perish" said the wise man of old (Prov. 29:18). For want of a true vision of God, a knowledge of His truth, and the God-given constraint which makes men give themselves in sacrificial service, the people will perish in their sins. But let men come to know the truth as it is in Christ, learn to know Him as the Son of God glorious and powerful, and then let them translate their knowledge of Christian truth and their personal spiritual experiences into the daily ministry to the needs of their fellow-men, and there will be songs of salvation and joy.

The transfiguration of our Lord meant much to Him as it brought new assurance of His divine Sonship, His acceptance with the Father, and His resurrection to follow the death of the cross. We do well to recognize its testimony to Him, but we think today especially of the experience of the disciples and their preparation for service. We, like them, must

I. Know Christian Truth.

Fundamental in both Christian life and service is a clear understanding of the person and work of Christ. One may come to Christ knowing little more than that He is the divine Saviour, and one may enter into Christian living with a meager knowledge of the doctrines of the Bible. But the Christian who fails to grow in knowledge will not grow in grace as he should.

The disciples came to a fuller conviction that He was the Son of God as they saw Him transfigured and heard the Father say, "This is my beloved Son." They learned more plainly the truth of His coming death for the sins of all mankind. They saw in the indescribable beauty of that moment the foregleam of His coming glory. What important truths these are—His deity—His redemption—His coming kingship. Do we have a clear grasp of these truths?

II. Experience Spiritual Power.

Great experiences of spiritual renewing and power are necessary to effective life and testimony. They may not be in outward manifestation, in fact they are more often in the inner recesses of the soul, but they transform men and send them forth to magnificent living for God.

The disciples had an unforgettable mountain-top experience. Even so have many others found the secret of power. It came to D. L. Moody as he walked down a New York street, praying in agony, "Deliver me from myself. Take absolute sway." The story of what happened to him and through him as a surrendered instrument in God's hand is written large on the pages of history. Others had similar experiences. Let us remember that such privileges are not reserved for a few, they are the birthright of every Christian. Power without knowledge is a dangerous and destructive thing, but knowledge without power is a dead thing, resulting in a stale and unfruitful orthodoxy that in turn produces a dreadful and unchristian religious system. It is not enough to know the truth, to be able to discuss it, to divide it, and possibly to fight about it. Let us study God's Word, but let the truth be baptized in the overflowing spiritual power of a personal experience with God.

III. Serve Needy Humanity.

Dr. Moore beautifully suggests that Jesus and the disciples went up to the place of prayer, into the place of glory, and down to the place of service. How fitting is that sequence. Much confusion exists in the church because those who have foolishly abandoned their interest in the truth of God's Word and have substituted the energy of the flesh for spiritual power, have been most diligent in service to humanity, while those who know and accept the truth about Christ, and who profess to believe in the power of the Spirit-filled life have failed to serve their needy neighbors. How delightful and useful is the normal, well-rounded life of the true Christian, one equipped with an understanding of Christian doctrine, endowed with Holy Ghost power, and humbly serving others.

The Eiffel Tower

Work on the tower began on January 22, 1887, and it was completed on March 31, 1889. It weighs 15,400,000 pounds and is composed of 12,000 steel plates of varying forms and dimensions held together by 2,500,000 rivets. The structure is 1,000 feet high and on a clear day from the top of the tower points 55 miles distant are visible.

During 1937 810,185 people visited the tower. A television station has been installed on the summit, which is to be operated in connection with the tower's radio station.

George Changed Line— But Not the Results

"The boys" had made a habit of meeting one evening a week for a chat over their doings, but recently many of the old faces had disappeared as their owners got work in different parts of the country.

One evening, Bill and Bob found themselves alone and began to talk over old times.

"That reminds me!" said Bill. "What happened to George after he failed as an architect?"

"Oh," replied Bob, "he went on the stage!"

"How's he doing there?"

"Still drawing poor houses," was Bob's unkind reply.

A BRIDE TODAY A WORK HORSE TOMORROW?

HARD, grinding labor was once the lot of every bride who went to a home beyond the city gas mains. Long hours of kitchen drudgery were in store for her... carrying coal... emptying ashes... trimming weeds... constantly fighting dirt and grime.

But that day is past. There's no reason for you to grow old too soon no need for you to work away your health and beauty.

For Shellane Cooking Gas brings you all the conveniences of city gas service. Delivered to your home anywhere, this pure natural gas makes it possible for you to have a really modern kitchen... to know the joy of modern cooking magic. It puts an end to kitchen drudgery. For Shellane doesn't even tarnish your pots and pans.

With Shellane you can have automatic hot water and automatic refrigeration, too. All at the cost of only a few cents a day!

THEY WON'T SAY DIE!

Their Friends May Weep But Courageous Cripples Overcome Handicaps and Carve Useful Careers in World of Business

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Next time you're down on your luck and your jaw sags like an overloaded clothesline, try swinging your legs and arms, or blinking your eyes. And be thankful you have arms, legs and eyes.

A lot of people haven't.

But the disasters that robbed them of these faculties have usually inspired them to make the best of it. More often than not they've achieved outstanding success.

Nineteen-year-old Jessie Simpson is an example. A few months back she was acclaimed Miss New Jersey, a personable young lady whose beauty and talent won admiration everywhere. Then one day she ran for a train, missed, and woke up in a hospital a few days later to find both her legs gone.

Gone, too, were tennis, golf, dancing and other sports, but Jessie Simpson didn't weep about it like her friends. Disaster brought her a new life, and today she's receptionist at the New York city telephone office. Moreover, she's building a career as a commercial photographer's model, for Jessie's hands are remarkably beautiful.

Legless Swimmer.

Speaking of legless people, there's also the case of Charles (Jimmy) Zibelman of New York who lost his legs years ago in a Chicago trolley accident. Since then he has become famous as a stunt swimmer. He was photographed drinking beer and smoking cigars while swimming "across the Atlantic ocean"—in the swimming pool of the Queen Mary. His most notable achievement is a 144-hour, 145-mile swim down the Hudson river from Albany to New York last autumn. Last winter he planned a similar excursion from Miami to Havana, sharks permitting.

In Provo, Utah, a high school student named Wilkins Nuttall is a prize-winning lightweight wrestler even though he has but one leg! Nuttall used to stand on the sidelines until he said to himself one day, "What has any other wrestler got that I haven't got?" and proceeded to give more experienced matmen a run for their money. Of course he can't apply a "scissors" hold, but it is equally impossible for an opponent to apply the "split" on him.

Success on "Stilts."

In the village of Bellflower, Calif., lives Ralph Veady, a leading business man and bicycle rider who nevertheless has no legs. Seven years ago Ralph was working his way through Whittier college by driving a tractor. One day the tractor overturned and he regained consciousness to find his legs gone. Today, seven years later, Veady conducts his jewelry business, drives his car and even dances, with the aid of artificial legs. A star performer in many amateur races, Veady is also an expert swimmer and a clever skater with or without his legs.

Only a few miles from Bellflower, in Huntington Park, lives Miss Clover Kerr, who lost both legs and one arm in a traffic accident last year. Like Jessie Simpson, she refused to be pitied, outlining a new career before she left her hospital bed. Today she has found the way to happiness and usefulness through service.

Miss Kerr is artist, counselor, philosopher and fairy godmother to hundreds of crippled youngsters in the Far West through her daily before scientific research found means of aiding the physically disabled. Today instruments have been designed which provide mechanical eyes and ears to youngsters born without sight or hearing.

ABOVE: Jessie Simpson, Hoboken, N. J., beauty, whose legs were cut off by a railroad train, but who has carved herself a new career as commercial photographers' model. BELOW: Bobby Jones, the world's greatest golfer, who was weak and puny as a child.

Science Takes a Hand.

In Evanston, Ill., five-year-old Joan Higgins cannot see or hear but is learning with the aid of a "phonotactor," devised by Dr. Robert H. Gault of Northwestern university. Whereas Helen Keller learned to "hear" by placing her fingers on the speaker's lips, Joan Higgins' phonotactor translates voices into vibrations. She places her fingers on sensitive reeds which vibrate from 64 to 8,000 times a second as the instructor speaks into a telephone transmitter.

Few joys can compare to that of the blind person who regains his sight through surgery. In Asbury Park, N. J., Mrs. Ella Reynolds was taken home from the hospital to see the three children whose faces she had often caressed, but whom she had never seen. After 15 years of total blindness she was again made happy by surgeons who removed cataracts from her eyes.

In El Paso, Texas, twelve-year-old Julian Galindo could only exclaim, "It's wonderful!—beautiful!" when he saw the world for the first time in his life. And a grandmother in Denver, whose sight was restored after 20 years, could see her three grandchildren after years of wondering what they looked like.

Infantile paralysis, one of mankind's most feared assailants, has left in its wake many a crippled victim but most of them have found new hope in the joy of living. The most publicized case is that of Frederick Snite, Jr., whose millionaire father willingly spends $2,000 a day to keep his son alive in the "iron lung" which may be his home for the next 10 years. Stricken in China during a round-the-world cruise, young Snite has lived in the lung almost two years but has never lost courage. He jokes with his nurses and his parents, keeps up an interest in world news and plays chess by calling his moves.

From Cripple to Athlete.

It's an accomplishment for a cripple to regain average health and become normally active, but it's amazing when they become outstanding athletes! Glenn Cunningham, the world's "fastest human," was trapped in a fire when he was eight years old. What had once been a pair of legs were grim, blackened fragments. Few people thought he would ever walk again but Cunningham fooled them. Today if you see him running around the track a full hour before his race starts, don't think Cunningham is "strutting" for the public. He has to exercise those rebuilt legs, to work up circulation by sustained effort.

Bobby Jones, the world's greatest golfer, was so skinny as a youngster that a good sneeze would have toppled him in the dust.

Modern society is taking a much more humane attitude toward the cripple than did our forefathers. Scientists and the public alike are realizing that physically handicapped people can become useful citizens if given help and encouragement.

Pioneers like Helen Keller have opened new fields of activity for the blind. They have been taught useful trades and have gained independence by using "seeing eye" dogs, highly intelligent animals who guide their masters through every traffic hazard without danger.

But it takes grit to face the world when the lights go out and you've no legs to stand on. Ask Nettie Timonds or Jessie Simpson!

What to Eat and Wh

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses WATER--the Elixir of Life

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th St., New York.

OF ALL the elements required to support life and maintain health and efficiency, water takes precedence. Without it, the protein, carbohydrates, fats, minerals and vitamins, which build and repair tissues, provide motive power for the body engine, and regulate the complex processes necessary to existence would be utterly useless.

Water is the magic stream through which all nutritive elements are carried into and through the body and there held in suspension. It is the ever-ready messenger which distributes heat, moisture and body-building material, where and as it is needed.

Man Is a Sponge

Our bodies are like water-logged sponges, for we carry water to the limit of our capacity. A human being is more than two-thirds water, and this proportion must be maintained, if health and strength are to be preserved.

There is enough water in a person weighing 150 pounds to fill a 15-gallon barrel. Muscles, liver and kidneys are about 80 per cent water, the brain 85 per cent. Even bone is made up of more than one-third water, so you can see that the old adage "dry as a bone" is not strictly accurate.

No cell can function unless it is constantly bathed in fluid. Furthermore, the cells depend upon water to transport their foods through the blood. This alone requires ten pounds of water in constant circulation.

We may term these functions an incoming service. But it is equally important as an outgoing stream. The cells need water to flush away their waste products. And if the surface of the lungs is not kept moist, there can be no intake of oxygen, no output of carbon dioxide.

Without water, no waste would be carried out of the body. Poisonous substances would remain to wreck the system within a short time. Water flushes the countless channels of physical existence—even while we sleep, for it constantly passes from the body through the lungs and skin, as well as through the bowels and kidneys.

Water Starvation

Where do we get all this water? When we are thirsty, we take a

WE OFFER ★ A New Food Department

★ All the accumulated knowledge and experience of C. Houston Goudiss, the man who for 30 years has exerted a wide influence on the food habits of this nation, are now available to homemakers through the series of articles now appearing in this newspaper. These discussions are as fascinating as fiction, as up to date as tomorrow, and, above all, authoritative. For no matter what aspect of food is under discussion, C. Houston Goudiss knows whereof he speaks.

★ His work has been a devotion to the study of food, both from the productive and the manufactured standpoint. He believes that better food means a better nation. Sharing these views, we have secured him to assist in carrying out our aims—to be the best available guide in the most important of all matters that affect the homes of the readers of this newspaper—for health, happiness and prosperity depend first of all upon food.

★ Every homemaker will want to clip these articles, and save them. She will find them invaluable aids in keeping her family properly fed.

drink and there the interest of most people ends. Few individuals give proper consideration to supplying the body with all the water it needs. Yet, when the water content of the body diminishes, health and life are in danger. A loss of 10 per cent of body water is a serious matter and a loss of 20 per cent is usually fatal.

It is only in rare instances—such as when lost in a desert—that man actually dies of thirst, for even when no fluids are drunk, water is consumed with food. But all about us we see men and women suffering from the effects of water starvation. Some indications of this are dryness of the skin and lips, mucous membranes and scalp. There is also danger of damaging the kidneys which require water to flush away the acid products of metabolism. And very often constipation can be traced to a deficiency of water, which is necessary to soften the contents of the intestinal canal.

None of these ill effects may be feared if you take enough water.

How Much Is Enough?

A healthy, normal individual requires about four quarts of water every 24 hours. That requirement varies somewhat with the season. In hot weather there is a greater elimination of water through perspiration and that loss must be replaced.

However, it is not necessary to drink four quarts of water a day. For part of our needs are supplied by food. The body draws upon three sources for its water: First, water taken as a drink or in other liquids; second, water supplied by foods, especially fruits and vegetables, for although solid foods appear dry, most of them are in fact from 75 to 95 per cent water; third, water formed in the tissues in the combustion of fuel foods. Fat gives the most water when burned. In fact, it produces more water than the weight of the original fat. Sugar gives the least.

Foods Rich in Water

A half-pound potato contains nearly a full glass of water. Some other foods that are more than 70 per cent water are asparagus, berries, string beans, cabbage, cauliflower, celery, cucumber, eggs, citrus fruits, cherries, grapes, melons, apples, raw and cooked greens, milk, onions, cooked green peas, boiled potatoes, sauerkraut, shell fish, meat steams, tomatoes and squash.

Foods containing less than 30 per cent water include butter, cakes, candies, ready-to-eat cereals, crackers, dried fruits, nuts, potato chips, sausage, bacon, syrups and zwieback.

Avoid the Dry Habit

In addition to the water consumed with food, every normal individual should drink about six glasses of liquid daily—as water, milk, coffee, tea or other beverages.

Most people drink far too little water. Women often have the mistaken notion that water will make them fat. To demonstrate the fallacy of this idea, a world-famous physician once remarked that if that were true, poor people would long ago have adopted the practice.

It is possible to drink too much water and those who are suffering from disease should be guided by their physician in determining the amount required. But most normal people could increase both mental and physical efficiency by taking more of this magic fluid.

Drink Water with Meals

The question is often asked—"Is it wise to drink water with meals?" The answer is "Yes."

Have You a Question?
Ask C. Houston Goudiss

C. Houston Goudiss has placed the disposal of readers of this paper all the facilities of his Experimental Kitchen Laboratory, New York City. He will gladly answer questions concerning food, nutrition, and their relation to health. You are also invited to consult in matters of personal hygiene, not necessary to write a letter, if you desire, for postcard inquiries will receive the same careful attention. Address C. Houston Goudiss, 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

There is evidence that the taking of a reasonable amount of water with meals by normal individuals stimulates the secretion of gastric juice, thereby improving digestion. It has also been demonstrated that it aids in the absorption of food by the body and retards the growth of bacteria.

The homemaker should be as conscientious in providing her family with sufficient water, with adequate amounts of water, as she is in providing for other food substances. For water must be included in the list of essential food constituents. In truth, the ELIXIR OF LIFE.

Questions Answered

C. D. L., Jr.—Pyorrhea to be associated with a minimum C deficiency which has on over a long period of time obtained adequate amounts of vitamin C, you should eat plenty of citrus fruits, tomatoes, strawberries and raw, leafy vegetables such as cabbage.

Miss T. P. G.—Yes, there is stimulant in cocoa that resembles caffeine in coffee. A cup of cocoa contains less stimulant than is found in tea or coffee.

Mrs. A. R. M.—No, milk fattening. Women especially that milk will increase weight, but this fear is not founded, since a pint of milk, in large glasses, only supplies calories.

Why . . . an Oil Polish?

And here, home-makers why? The oil element in polish is absolutely essential to all wood! For the same reason we oil machinery—water plants—massage cream in face—is oil polish used! The principle applies—for wood it is absolutely necessary to keep it "alive!" The best oil is a fine, non-greasy oil—and it is just this—when rubbed or massaged into the wood that prevents the wood from checking, drying out, splitting, cracking. Furniture with any of these things, when for—and it is the combination of the "oil" and the "rubbing" prevents it! For the quality of polish "feeds" the hungry wood keeps the wood young! Other finishes may give a quick, easy achieve luster—but a little and energy (it should not be) on the part of the housewife will pay dividends in the long life of her furniture woodwork. All experts agree an oil polish properly used (on damp cloth—as directed)—only better—it is vital! And home-makers, take this important tip: Always use an oil polish—the best one!

Funeral Service For Mrs. Howard Here Saturday

FOLLOWING STROKE THIS WEDNESDAY MORNING

Her Husband and Four Adult Children

Mrs. Elmer Howard, age 60 years, died at her home northeast of Klemme this Wednesday morning at 5:00 o'clock, following a stroke. Mrs. Howard had not been in good health for the past several weeks.

The funeral service will be held at the Klemme Methodist Church Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock and burial will be made in the Klemme Cemetery.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Howard leaves two sons and two daughters to mourn her death. They are Ned Howard, of Klemme; Robert Howard, of Ventura; Mrs. Howard Spitzer of near Klemme; and Mrs. John Graham of Harboro, Iowa.

The obituary will be published in the Times next week.

NEW TREES SET OUT AT CEMETERY LAST WEEK

The board of trustees recently had a number of old trees taken out at the Klemme Cemetery and placed an order for new trees to replace them. The other day a few of men from the Earl Ferris nursery delivered the trees and set them out at the Cemetery. Twenty-two Conoco Firs, each about seven feet high, were set out by the men.

Letters From Home

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Recently there descended on Congress from the folks back home a flood of protests on the so-called Reorganization bill.

Specifically, many of the messages opposed features of the measure which constituents feared would remove certain brakes on spending of the public funds, would grant to the Executive branch of government powers they felt should be limited to the Legislative branch, and would change the administration of our Civil Service.

But fundamentally, in the opinion of experienced observers, what the public most feared was the possibility of further surrender by Congress of the powers and authority entrusted to it by the Constitution and the people.

This apprehension was not groundless. In recent years, in response to pleas of emergency, the public has seen many congressmen willing to relinquish to the Executive branch of government and its various responsibilities which they were elected to assume. Every surrender of such authority means, of course, a surrender of the power of the people those congressmen represent.

If enough of that authority is bartered away, our boasted "balance of powers" between the Legislative, the Executive and the Judicial branches of government can become an empty phrase.

So long as that authority is retained by the people through their elected representatives, Democracy persists. If it is lost, Democracy falls. The Old World may offer eloquent evidence of what can happen to human freedom and human rights when representative government fails to assert itself.

That is something for Congressmen to remember when they read the mail which urges them to fulfill the responsibilities for which they were elected, and keep government close to their constituents, the people.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. My corn allotment is 50 acres. My normal yield established by the County Committee is 40 bushels. In 1938 I plant 50 acres of corn and my yield is 60 bushels to the acre. Will I be penalized for producing too much corn?

A. No.

Q. If, in the fall of 1938, we have marketing quotas, how many bushels will I be required to store if my corn allotment is 50 acres, my normal corn yield is 40 bushels and my actual yield on those 50 acres this fall is 60 bushels.

A. If it is determined by the Secretary that 10 per cent of your corn allotment is to be stored, it would mean that you would be required to store 10 percent of your 50 acres or 5 acres times the normal yield of 40 bushels or 200 bushels even though these 5 acres might have produced 300 bushels.

Q. I am raising 20 acres of hybrid corn which will be harvested for seed. Will this hybrid corn acreage count against my corn allotment?

A. Yes. This hybrid corn will count the same as any other field corn.

Q. I own one farm alone and another man and I own a second farm as partners. The farm I own myself will be over-planted so that it will be a penalty farm. Will I be liable for any of the penalty on the partnership farm on my own farm?

A. In all cases in the 1938 Program a partnership will be considered as one person and, in your question, performance will be checked on each farm as though owned by two separate parties, except there is a provision in the Docket which states that the Secretary may withhold any part or all of any payment (1) if a practice has been adopted which tends to defeat any of the purposes of the Program. (2) if, by means of any corporation, partnership, estate, trust, or any other device or in any manner whatsoever, has offset or has participated in offsetting, in whole or in part, the performance for which such payment is otherwise authorized.

Q. If I plant sweet sorghums and cut and shock the same before grain has formed, and later cut the dry fodder and put it in the silo, will it still be non-depleting?

A. If sweet sorghums are put in the silo they would be depleting even though they were first shredded in the shock.

Q. My farm has not been measured. If my corn allotment is 50 acres and I plant two fields which I think contain 50 acres, will deductions be made for over-planting if, upon measuring this fall, they find that I have planted 52 acres of corn?

A. Deductions will be made on the over-planting of corn even though you did not make this over-planting intentionally. You should carefully measure any field planted to corn in the spring of 1938 which has not been measured before and if you are planting a part of a field which has been measured, you should by all means measure that part of the field which you are planting to corn.

Q. Will the spreading of limestone count toward my soil building goal if it is spread on land

FOOLISH QUESTION NO. 41144

The First of May

The first day of May is an interesting date! Way back in the time of the Pharaohs, the Egyptians celebrated the coming of May with song and festival. Nourished by the flood waters of the Nile, the lands of Egypt gave forth an abundance of grass and grain. As they harvested the ancient Egyptians sang the praises of the gods that brought life to a desert land. But it was the Romans who gave the first day of May its modern significance, that of a flower festival. Coming as it did within the period sacred to Flora, the Roman goddess of flowers, the city by the Tiber decked out its seven hills in flowers to celebrate the season of the Floralia.

Medieval England added its bit to the growing celebration with the maypole ceremonial. For our English ancestors, the first day of May was a season of joy and laughter. With the earliest glint of dawn, all classes of people were off to the country to go "a-maying." Back they came to the hamlets and villages, their arms heavy with tree branches and flowers, but their feet light as they danced around the gayly be-ribboned maypole.

The first of May got its most modern significance in 1889 when the International Socialist Congress selected the old flower holiday as a day on which to celebrate international labor. Since that year, the music of May festivals has clashed with the singing of labor songs, the parades of garland bearers have crossed the paths of marching workers, and the crowning of May queens has given way in the news to the cracked heads of labor's more boisterous paraders.

The first day of May' Day of the flower goddess, the maypole dance and the labor parade. From the past and the present, time has gathered a halo of meaning to crown the first day of May. For that proud youngster hurrying home with his very own may-basket, for the flower-crowned young lady, for the marching unionists—May Day is an important occasion.

The service is especially enjoyable for those of the congregation who understand and speak the German language.

which is not seeded to a soil conserving crop?

A. Yes.

Q. If I find that my corn allotment is only about one-half as large as my neighbor's corn allotment and we have the same number of crop acres, what can I do about it?

A. You should see your township committeeman at once, for there is a possibility that an error has been made. However, here is a possibility of quite a range in the number of acres of corn allotment on two farms which might be quite similar if the production of corn on these two farms was materially different in the years of 1936 and 1937. Corn acreage allotments are established by taking into consideration crop practices in the years 1936 and 1937 and the slope, degree of erosion and productivity of the land.

HIGH SCHOOL TEACHER ANNOUNCES ENGAGEMENT TO WATERLOO MAN

Miss Florence Wallace entertained a number of ladies at a dinner and an announcement party at the Paul Mueller home last Saturday evening. Guests included the teachers of the Klemme grade and high school: Misses Hansen, Azeltine, Irvine, Merritt and Brakel; Mrs. Galbreth, Mrs. Kingery, Mrs. Earl Schaeffer and Mrs. Mueller.

A color scheme of pink and silver was carried out in the table decorations. A bowl of pink rosebuds and pink tapers centered the table. Small hat boxes at each place served as nut cups. Pink and silver streamers from each place led to small bonnets arranged around the flowers. Each bonnet contained a puzzle, which, when completed, revealed the engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Wallace to Mr. Harold Harper of Waterloo.

Jacqueline Kudje and Marian Waterman served the dinner.

During the evening bridge was played. Mrs. Kingery had high score and Miss Merritt received the travel prize.

Senior Class Play Two Nights Thursday, Friday

SAVE THE GAME COVER

That is the plea made by Ellis A. Hicks, Extension Wildlife Specialist of the Iowa State College.

In his statement he explains that many farmers and suburban dwellers now are burying over their fence rows, gully banks, small farmstead tracts, waste strips and corners.

One of the chief reasons for this practice is the intended destruction of weeds by rendering the seeds non-viable; but according to Dr. Porter, Director of the Seed Laboratory at Iowa State College, the seeds may be benefited more than they are harmed. In most cases the seeds are shattered to the ground before spring or widely dispersed by physical agents so that warmth from the clean-up may result in hastening the germination of the seeds, thus insuring the farmer of an early competitive weed crop. Last year's weeds' stalks are finished off in a hurry but that doesn't do anything to counteract the germination of seeds which soon start a new crop of weeds. Do not burn old weed stalks if you wish to delay a new crop of weeds.

A burned gully bank is an open invitation for more silt to feed the Mississippi. A mat of weed stalks, a briar patch, or a blanket of dead bluegrass is of prime importance in preventing the gully from widening out and eating back farther.

The longevity of a fence is greatly reduced by the flame and heat. Resistance of the wire is weakened so that rusting soon occurs. Extreme changes of temperature and humidity help to lessen the tension resistance so that the expense of farm upkeep is accordingly increased.

Both wood and iron posts suffer. The wood post may be only slightly charred but decomposition will have just that much less to do when rotting occurs at the "decay" line where open air meets moisture, bacteria and small animal life contained in the soil. The life of a good fence post may be reduced several years.

The paint on an iron post is cracked open or burned off entirely for a couple of inches above the ground line so that rusting quickly occurs.

Control of farm insect pests is suggested by some as being satisfactorily effected through the burn-over; but Dr. Carl J. Drake, State Entomologist, does not recommend this process for combating insects. It has been tried and has failed in attempts to control chinch bugs. Many of the worst crop pests such as grasshoppers, white grubs, cutworms and corn earworms hibernate in the soil in various life stages so that burning does no good.

The winter welfare of a game crop as important as Iowa's upland game birds cannot be overlooked. A fence row grown up with buck brush, greater ragweed, wild grape, hazel brush, green briar, smaller weeds and matted blue grass offers a good assortment of material for winter cover to be used especially by pheasant, bob-white quail, Hungarian partridge and cottontail rabbit.

Spring field operations destroy much cover, necessarily. Game birds and mammals then need the little remaining weed and grass cover of corners and fence rows very badly. Burn that cover and the game is homeless and practically defenseless against predators.

The cottontail is very fond of thick, high blue grass with which to construct his form. As Iowa's

DON'T MISS THIS!

The senior play, "Another Spring," which will be given at the high school Thursday and Friday, April 28 and 29, is one of the most elaborate and beautiful productions ever attempted here.

The play consists of a prologue and three acts. The setting of the prologue takes the audience back 150 years to the American Revolution. The play proper brings the action to the present time in the same room.

The seriousness and sentiment of the play is relieved at timely intervals by the capers of three negroes, Washington and Sugar, the servants, and Liza, the cook.

The play is under the direction of Florence Wallace, high school dramatics instructor. Martin K. Elstad is in charge of special music connected with the play.

most common and well known animal used for food he deserves considerable attention with respect to improving his surroundings.

The cheery bob-white delights in constructing his nest along a blue grass fence row bordering a country lane. When it is understood that this bird is very instrumental as a destroyer of the Colorado potato beetle, 12-spotted cucumber beetle, wireworm, cutworm, chinch bug, corn billbug, and clover leaf weevil; and that weed seeds form more than half of his diet—including crab grass, witch grass, foxtail, bindweed, sheep sorrel, smartweed, lamb's-quarters, ragweed and Spanish needle; then can some estimate be formed of the amount of good this game bird does for Iowa agriculture.

Rebuke for Roosevelt

Washington.—By now, the smoke of battle has cleared away and a proper appraisal can be made of the greatest political defeat President Roosevelt has had since he entered the White House. Perhaps, indeed, by killing the government reorganization bill, the house of representatives administered to Mr. Roosevelt the most stern rebuke he ever has had since he entered politics. That licking has been given now and we are, or ought to be, concerned with its meaning because the story contains valuable information.

First, I think it ought to be said that Mr. Roosevelt was made a victim of his own brand of politics. It is quite absurd to say that the bill to reorganize the federal government would have given him dictatorial powers. It did add to his powers, but he has powers now which would let him be a dictator if he felt that he dared to use them. So we can dismiss that dictatorship phase of the controversy insofar as its merit is concerned. We can not dismiss it, however, as a factor, indeed, the factor, that brought about the President's crushing defeat.

There is no use in hemming and having about the real issue that was decided in the house vote, which was by the narrow margin of 204 to 196. That issue was the combined fear and dislike of Mr. Roosevelt against confidence in and blind following of Mr. Roosevelt. In other words, it was the climax of a fight that has been going on since Mr. Roosevelt attempted to force legislation granting him six additional appointments to the Supreme Court of the United States, an accumulation of undercurrent bitterness.

The real importance of the reorganization bill, therefore, lay in the fact that it was a political football, a vehicle. It was being carried by Mr. Roosevelt's faction in congress—and eventually was boot off of the field by those who dislike or distrust him.

The reason I feel so certain about the real issue in the case is that a Democratic congress only a few short years ago almost gave the President, Herbert Hoover, the same powers sought by Mr. Roosevelt now. Further, an overwhelmingly Democratic-New Deal congress did give Mr. Roosevelt virtually the same powers in 1933, and he neglected to use them. The question, therefore, strikes me as being clear cut. In fact, it is made to appear that there is no question. A majority of congress—representatives and senators—were looking for a chance to show the President they again want to be congress and not a rubber stamp.

The strangest thing about this battle was that a mistake by the President provided the basis for a new courage on the part of congress. I said above that it was absurd for anyone to believe the reorganization bill would make Mr. Roosevelt dictator. It would have done some dangerous things which I shall discuss later in this article, but the dictator phase was rather silly. Yet, it was the conviction of hundreds of thousands of persons that the legislation would make Mr. Roosevelt dictator that licked the bill. And paradoxically, Mr. Roosevelt caused them to believe that. His own act was responsible for that conviction.

It will be remembered that Mr. Roosevelt was in Warm Springs, Ga., on vacation when the bill was passed by the senate. It was obvious from the close call it had in the senate, even after certain concessions had been made, that it was confronted with trouble in the house. Mr. Roosevelt told newspaper correspondents at Warm Springs of his gratification that the "senate could not be purchased by misrepresentation." That provoked a row in the senate. Sen. Hiram Johnson of California told the senate he would be "wanting in courage if he did not resent" such statements. Others spoke as frankly.

The congressional record for that day contains several emphatic observations to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt was treading closely to the edge of constitutional rights. The Constitution, it will be recalled, assures the right of petition. It says that congress must make no law that will interfere with the right of petitioning the government.

Then the Storm Broke

That was just a flurry, however, when compared with that storm which was to break next day. According to authenticated reports, Mr. Roosevelt informed the correspondents in his party at Warm Springs that he would have an important announcement to make very late that night. They were enjoined to say nothing; they were not to let their home offices know that an important announcement was coming. In the middle of the night—between midnight and one o'clock—the correspondents were given the important announcement of which they had been advised. It was a letter, or a copy of a letter to "a friend," who was not identified in the press release. It praised the purposes and plans of the reorganization bill and then said in these words:

"I do not want to be a dictator; I have none of the qualifications to be a successful dictator, and I have too much historical background and too much knowledge of existing dictatorships to make me desire any form of dictatorship for America."

Publication of that statement convinced hundreds of thousands of persons that Mr. Roosevelt could be a dictator under it. They deluged house members with telegrams, letters, telephone calls, personal calls. The pressure was terrific, although in the morning of the day the bill was killed, I doubt there were twenty men in the house who believed the measure would be sent back to committee for burial. They hoped to emasculate it, but they did not believe they could destroy it completely.

Now, as to a further reason why I believe the President's denial of a dictatorship desire proved his own undoing, I quote here a paragraph of a statement made on the floor of the house by Representative Barton of New York (an advertising executive in private life):

"Mr. Speaker, one of the first lessons I learned in advertising was taught me by the head of a great concern manufacturing radiators. He said to me: 'Never advertise that our radiators do not leak. I do not want the word, leak, or the idea of leaking associated in the public mind with our product in any way.' Mr. Speaker, night before last a certain gentleman got up in the middle of the night to associate the words, dictator and dictatorship, with his name, thereby putting those words into the minds of 130,000,000 people, many of whom may never have thought of them before. I do not know much about political strategy, but I do know that this national advertisement of an idea of dictatorship, like his use of the word, purchase, and his use of the word, feudalism, was bad advertising practice."

And there you have the complete answer. It was the greatest political mistake Mr. Roosevelt has made, greater even than submission of the bill to appoint six new members of the Supreme court. When he mentioned dictatorship, millions of Americans, proud of America, its traditions and its heritages, suddenly understood and said "No, Mr. President!"

Earlier, I mentioned some dangerous phases of the bill. Those phases concern federal money and federal patronage. Patronage, pap and projects, as the thing is now broadcast.

At the outset, the bill contained provisions for placing the interstate commerce commission under political control. That would provide political control of the railroads—and railroad rates. Politicians have wanted to get fingers in that pie for half a century. Outbursts against that were terrific and it was eliminated. Provisions which would have permitted political control of the securities and exchange commission also were sidetracked. But there remained provisions which would have destroyed the general accounting office and the civil service commission. The first named agency decides whether congressional appropriations have been spent or are being spent according to law. The second has been the defender of the merit system in government. It has fought off political spoilsmen successfully until recent years.

Had these two provisions remained in the bill and if it had passed congress, Mr. Roosevelt, or any succeeding President, would have had direct control of spending billions of dollars, ordinary government expenses, relief, public works, grants to cities and states—all of the money. And reference must be made to political appointments for the spending of this money because they go hand in hand. There you have executive control that could perpetuate any kind of a political machine; Pendergast, in Kansas City, or the Kelly-Nash machine in Chicago, or Guffey in Pennsylvania, had to be in league with the White House in Washington or sink, if the President had the control that was proposed.

In summation, then, it seems proper to say that Democrats are breaking away from the New Deal faction in a more definite manner than ever before. I firmly believe we shall see reprisals against many of them; I believe, too, we will see some who voted against the reorganization bill come crawling back for presidential favors in order to gain re-election, and I think we saw in the reorganization bill defeat, the beginning of the end of the New Deal in control of American national policies.

SPORTS CHATTER

(by "Flash")
The game with Goodell was a wild one with errors, wild throws, and a great deal of hitting going on for both sides. It ended at 12 to 8. The Shamrocks will be badly wrecked by losing their only pitcher, Kluckhohn, who was injured in the Goodell game. There are several trying out for the new job.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

Irene Suckow made 31 words with 4 errors, Harold Wicks made 34 words with 5 errors. Ronald Gibbs made 31 words with 2 errors, and Doris Johnson is at the top with 46 words and 4 errors. These typing rates are from the last two weeks.

For several weeks, Ruth Rldder has been writing the Junior Class News, rather than Irene Suckow as has been stated in the Staff.

The junior and senior classes enjoyed a roller skating party at Belmond, April 14.

The senior class has ordered their announcements for graduation.

The public speaking class has studying debates. Wednesday we had two debates. One group argued on the topic—Resolved: 'hat submarines should be abolished from naval warfare. The negative side was the winner of this argument. The other argument was—Resolved: that capital punishment should be abolished. The negative side won this, too.

Two coming events of some importance will be on May 6. They will be a combination Parent-Teacher's meeting and school exhibit.

Grade School News

GRADES 1 AND 2

Robert brought three baby rabbits to school on Wednesday. We tried to feed them, but only one would drink milk.

The second graders finished their circus booklets last week.

We named our train—"The Primary Passenger".

The second graders are reading stories about fire trucks and firemen. Edward brought his toy fire truck to school.

GRADES 3 AND 4

The third graders' class median for Number drill 9 is "good." Phyllis and Peggy made perfect scores. Roger R. had a rating of excellent.

We have completed the unit on "The Playground of Europe". Now we are going to make a frieze to show a home on the alps.

We learned how to cut letters during art classes. The fourth graders made health posters with lettering on them.

We visited the lumberyard Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Grange gave us many things for our museum. We wrote stories about the trip.

GRADES 5 AND 6

Junior Buntenbach, Reporter
A new pupil came into our room on Tuesday. His name is Larry Van Syoc and he is in the sixth grade.

Since we have finished our history in fifth grade we have been having science. We are working on a unit over moths and butterflies. Two more of the cocoons hatched this week.

Marjorie and Herbert Mueller have brought some pretty flowers for our room.

The fifth graders are taking an imaginary trip to Canada. We have been studying the lumbering industry there. We learned that many of the newspapers of our country own acres of forest land along the St. Lawrence River. These newspapers need much wood. One of the largest New York dailies requires the wood from eighty acres of forest to make a single Sunday edition.

GRADES 7 AND 8

The eighth grade elected class officers. Billy Zabilka was elected president; Melvin Coobs, vice president; and Garland Brinkman, secretary and treasurer.

Wednesday evening we had a treasure hunt. We met at school and divided into two groups. Charles and Billy Z. were chosen leaders. The trail led us all over town. The end of the trail led us to a bonfire where we roasted weiners and marshmallows.

GARNER — P. L. Stainbrook, Burt, district organization director of the Farm Bureau, spent the past week here working from the Hancock county Farm Bureau office.

On Monday Stainbrook was accompanied by John Engstler of Concord township in obtaining new members, on Tuesday by C. J. Wille of Klemme in Ell township, Wednesday by Harry Ruka; Thursday by A. G. Ruka, both of Twin Lake township and on Friday by Carl Franzen of Britt in Boone township.

ELIMINATE BROODER HOUSE

CORNERS BY USE OF SACKS

Chilly spring nights may cause serious chick losses if the chicks are allowed to pile up in corners of the brooder house away from the hover.

To prevent this, H. L. Wilcke, head of poultry husbandry at Iowa State College, suggests that a guard of wire covered with sacks or of 8 to 10 short boards (to prevent sharp corners) be placed around the brooder stove. This guard should be located about 2 to 3 feet from the edge of the hover at first, but the distance may be gradually increased until the chicks have the run of the whole house.

Such a guard will not only keep the chicks close to the fire, but will eliminate drafts. A 10 to 12 foot brooder house will hold about 240 to 300 chicks without overcrowding or stunting.

The only time some men ever get a chance to open their mouths is when they visit the dentist.

Every one has something that he would rather work at than anything else—but most people would rather work at intervals.

The American Way of Living

We have the highest standard of living in the world. But we have not attained it by divine right. Instead we have earned it by our efforts.

Down through the years our people have practiced thrift. They have been resourceful, courageous, far sighted. They have worked hard. And our country has forged steadily ahead.

This bank believes that so long as these basic American principles endure, and as long as business men, banks, the people and the government work hand in hand, we will go forward.

Our financial services can be very helpful to those who wish to move ahead.

The Funeral Coach

me 45 years ago, when the town of Klemme was very young, E. P. Schaeffer in addition to his store, put in a small stock of coffins, and thus established the Funeral Service in this community.

pioneer settlers in this rough country were mostly strong, active young people. Consequently there were few funerals. Our books show that more than half of the during the first ten years were children.

r. Schaeffer did not own a Hearse, but this service was supplied by a neighbor. ed a spring wagon in the summertime and a bob sled in the winter.

few years later, while Edw. L. Schaub owned the business, a beautiful horse drawn served the community for nearly 20 years. For several years John Swalve for us. He had a beautiful black team, a new harness, and long black fly nets. We very proud of this equipment.

en came the automobile. Our first Motor shown at the right, was built on a Model sis, and since then we have used four or ferent makes and kinds, and each was the its kind in its day.

way, we have in use the Henney Packard "Nu-3-Way" funeral coach, pictured below.

is modern side servicing funeral coach is equipped with noiseless rubber rollers -stone die cast hardware in polished metal and black. The interior is modern in and embodies many practical as well as decorative refinements. The "Nu-3-Way" length casket table operates through both side doors and can be extended out the or.

This funeral vehicle is built on an eight cylinder Packard chassis, with especially designed springs and wide appointments which make it ideal as a casket coach.

We are glad to put this fine new equipment in service for the Klemme Community.

Vitamin D Material Removed From Skin by Shower and Rub

By DR. FRANK THONE

Washington.—You play a few sets of tennis, or toss a medicine ball, or take some other kind of vigorous exercise in the sunshine. You come in to the shower feeling full of pep and vitamins. You rub yourself down briskly with a rough towel, and feel even better. But you've lost a good part of the vitamins you have just been acquiring!

For now it appears that the shower and rubdown that are orthodox parts of the American exercise and health ritual actually remove from the skin some of the stuff that vitamin D is made of. This is the conclusion of experiments at the Institutum Divi Thomae in Cincinnati, performed by Agnes C. Helmer and Rev. Cornelius H. Jansen.

In the experiments, groups of students, after exercising, had their bodies above the waist washed with clear water, which was all carefully saved and evaporated down. The terry cloths with which the students dried themselves were also saved. The residue from the washing and terry cloths was extracted with ether, and the material thus obtained subjected to ultraviolet irradiation and fed to rats afflicted with rickets.

What the Athletes Lose.

The defective bones of the rats healed up, showing that the athletes' "washings" had contained the precursor or raw material for vitamin D, which was then converted into the vitamin by the ultraviolet treatment.

In a second experiment the students were first irradiated with ultraviolet and the extracts then made in a similar manner. The results with rats proved that the washing had removed vitamin D itself from the boys' skins.

In their conclusions the experimenters state: "There is a definite evidence that the secretions from the skin contain precursors of vitamin D, which after irradiation are due to be reabsorbed by the body, and the removal of which tends to produce a dearth of the vitamin unless it be supplied in some other form."

Poker Excels Art Works for Rousing Emotions

New York.—Art does not contain emotion, nor is it very powerful in rousing emotion, Dr. Carroll C. Pratt, psychologist of Rutgers university told the New York Academy of Sciences here.

"The emotional effects of a game of poker, the news of the death of a friend, or reports of fluctuations in the stock market are frequently far more powerful than any of those which come from the contemplation of work of art," he said.

"Certain patterns of tone may sound agitated, but the person listening to them need not necessarily feel agitated. The resemblance of the two has led most aestheticians to assume that there is a real emotion somewhere, when actually there may be no emotion, in any strict sense, anywhere."

Red Pine Has Disease That Causes Forking

Philadelphia.—Red pine, recommended as a hardy and disease-resistant replacement for the fungus-threatened white pines of the northeastern United States, is not without its own disease troubles. A newly detected one is described in Science by Dr. John Austin Jump, botanist at the University of Pennsylvania.

The disturbance consists in abnormally accelerated growth of one or more of the side buds at the tip, causing a forked growth of the tree. The angle between the forks is not always properly healed up, which permits fungi and other decay organisms to enter. The cause of the disorder is not yet known, but a fungus origin is suspected.

Chemical War on Ants Is Found to Be Very Effective

New Haven, Conn.—Chemical warfare methods have been proved effective against carpenter ants, which have been ruining large numbers of telephone poles in Connecticut and other states. The ants do not eat wood, as termites do, but only dig out nests in it. The effect, however, is just as ruinous.

Scientists at the state experiment station here have found that poles not too much hollowed out can be saved by sounding for the top of the cavity, boring a hole, and injecting a mixture of coal tar and creosote and gasoline or refined creosote. A pressure gun is used for forcing in the liquid.

Drift From Alaska Toward North Pole Is Bartlett's Plan

New York.—Captain Robert A. (Bob) Bartlett, North America's foremost veteran of the Arctic, has called for "three or four young fellows" or an ice-breaker and crew to carry out a drift expedition from the Alaska coast toward the North Pole similar to the feat just completed by four Soviet Russian scientists.

Warmly praising the achievement of the Russians in making detailed scientific observations through a nine-month vigil on an ice floe that drifted from the North pole toward the Greenland coast, Captain Bartlett said such an expedition would serve to complete knowledge of the other half of the Arctic basin.

The Arctic veteran, who accompanied the late Admiral Robert E. Peary as far north as 87 degrees 48 minutes north latitude on Peary's historic dash on foot to the North pole in 1909, called such an expedition as he proposes the natural complement to the work of the Russians.

Either a small group of men could drift on an ice floe or the proper type of wooden ship, imprisoned in the ice and clear the Siberian coast where ice pressure might destroy it, could carry out the work.

Must Start in Fall.

"It would be necessary to start from the Alaskan coast in the fall of the year," he explained. Ice conditions for the type of boat necessary are best at that time of the year, while starting from Alaska is necessitated by the need for avoiding the Siberian coast.

Such a party would drift north-eastward in the direction of the pole, as the Russians drifted south-westward from the pole—both drifts being across the icy "roof of the world."

Fridtjof Nansen, famous Norwegian explorer, made a roughly similar trip in the Fram from 1893 to 1896, drifting from the Bering sea to a point near Spitzbergen while caught fast in the ice. But, Captain Bartlett believes, such a journey today would produce valuable results because of the many major scientific advances since that time and the improved instruments men on such an expedition would have at their command.

Interested particularly in the shape of the ocean floor, Captain Bartlett pointed out that such a group would have as an aid the sonic depth finder with which it might investigate the contour of the ocean bottom and the depth of the Polar seas.

Love of Cattle as "Money" Ruins the Land in Africa

London.—Love of money on the hoof is the root of most of the evils that afflict native tribes in Central and South Africa. It eats the land like a cancer, it brings the folk to the doorsill of black starvation.

It all goes back to the completely senseless regard the pastoral tribes have for cattle, Sir Daniel Hall, director of the John Innes Horticultural institution, pointed out in a Royal institution lecture here.

Cattle are money to the tribesmen, Sir Daniel explained. They do not eat them. They do not even milk them. They just keep them, increase their herds as much as possible, and use them only in swapping for wives and as means of prestige-gaining ostentation. They literally hoard herds.

These hoards of living money exact hungry usury off the land. They strip the grasslands bare. Their owners destroy the forests, to make new pastures. The cattle strip these also. Erosion sets in, gnawing the land into deep gullies. The people, threatened with starvation by the greedy feeding of their own luxury-cattle, have to look to the government for bread.

Sumerians Went to Battle in Ass-Drawn Chariots

Chicago.—In the ass-and-buggy age, 2800 B. C., brave Sumerians jogged to war in chariots pulled by four plodding asses. Archeologists of the Oriental institute, University of Chicago, have unearthed the evidence—a tiny model of this old-fashioned turnout, found at ruins of Tell Agrab, near Baghdad in Mesopotamia.

The toy model proves Sumerians had asses at this early age, and casts doubt on the theory they had the more speedy animal, the horse, at that time. The model also reveals they equipped their wheels with copper studs in tire fashion, probably for better traction.

Oil for Troubled Water

Copenhagen.—Not just oil, but whale-oil, is the right prescription for the traditional troubled waters, experiments by the Danish research ship Ingolf have shown. During a severe gale, it was found that a gallon of whale oil released on the waves had as much effect as 21 gallons of fuel oil, and that the quieting effect lasted between three and four times as long.

NEW YORK'S night clubs seem to be an excellent spring board for girls who want to jump on up into the movies. Just look at this list—Grace Moore got her professional start in one and Frances Faye stepped from one into a part in a picture with Bing Crosby.

Alice Faye, Eleanor Powell, Arlene Judge, Grace Bradley, and Martha Raye all were night club enertainers. Olympe Bradna also appeared for a time in one, on her way from Paris to Hollywood.

Even though Marlene Dietrich isn't under contract to any motion picture company at the moment nobody needs to worry about her financial future; she's signed a radio contract that will pay her $5,000 a week. Lots of money! But recently when she had her pictures taken by her favorite photographer at Paramount she had to pay for them because she no longer works there. And that's the sort of thing that screen stars mind most awfully.

Shirley Temple has put her hair up and is losing her teeth—it's not unusual for her to report at the studio, "Well, I lost another tooth today." Fortunately she's young enough not to have it mean tragedy. In "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" she has six songs, and you'd hardly recognize the dear old story, it's been so changed to make a good vehicle for her. But the change was worth it; the best box office attraction in pictures is at her best.

You'll see Errol Flynn in "The Singing Cop" also, before long, and you'll hear a song that he wrote, "Tahiti Lullaby," which is used in the picture. The man can do anything!

Those Walt Disney "Mickey Mouse" programs have gone so well that the sponsor has renewed the series for 26 weeks—they're on NBC's Red network on Sundays at five-thirty. But Mickey will have a vacation during the summer, starting May 15.

Andy Donnelly, Jr., who plays Junior on the "Dick Tracy" programs, sets a good example to the thousands of youngsters who wouldn't miss that broadcast for anything. Though he lives in New York and goes to school there, he gets over to Ridgefield, N. J., every Sunday to go to church with his family.

Charles Bickford tried his luck in a stage play and it failed, so now he's back in Hollywood, hoping for better luck next time, and making a picture for Republic, "Gangs of New York," with another old-timer, James Cruze, directing, and Nancy Carroll scheduled to play the heroine if she's willing. Bickford's return to the screen will recall the stirring days of his earlier successes as a forceful he-man.

ODDS AND ENDS—Eddie Cantor lectured recently at Columbia university; he gave an excellent talk on "comedy on the air," after remarking that it was ironic for a man who'd never been through grammar school to be lecturing at a university. . . . Richard Gordon, who plays Sherlock Holmes on the air, loved to play "cops and robbers" when he was a kid—and always was one of the robbers. . . . Deanna Durbin was given a valuable stamp collection not long ago, but knows so little about stamps that she didn't appreciate it—she'd rather collect match books. . . . Mrs. Martin Johnson will appear on Al Jolson's broadcast May third. . . . Since Jack Benny was named America's second best-dressed man he's been swamped by mail from men who want his advice on their clothes. . . . Frank Black's favorite bait is the tip of a bamboo fly-casting rod. . . . Mary Carlisle, who is making "Hunted Man" for Paramount, has some new stockings that have zippers up the back.

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses

TEETH--Your Passport to Good Health--and Tells How You Can Avoid the Tragedy of Dental Decay

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York.

A SCIENTIST, who was also a wit, once remarked that you must be true to your teeth or they will be false to you. That most people do not heed this advice is evidenced by the fact that almost 100 per cent of the adult population is affected by some form of oral disease, and from 90 to 97 per cent of all school children have decayed teeth.

As there is a close relationship between healthy teeth and healthy bodies, and conversely, between decayed teeth and sickly bodies, it is easy to understand why science views this appalling situation with the greatest alarm—and why such an eminent authority as Professor Ernest A. Hooton of Harvard University warns that "unless steps are taken to discover preventives of tooth infection, and correctives of dental deformation, the course of human evolution will lead downward to extinction."

Health and Happiness Depend on Sound Teeth

That is a strong statement, but it is not an exaggeration, for it would be difficult to over-estimate the influence of the teeth upon human health and happiness.

Do you wonder how teeth can affect happiness? Consider, then, that a pretty face depends, first, upon the position of the mouth when the lips are closed, and second, upon the appearance of the teeth when the lips are parted. You cannot have a lovely mouth when the lips close over crooked front teeth; you cannot have an attractive smile if the teeth are dull.

And when gums recede, and loosened teeth are forced out of their natural position, the position of the lips is likewise changed—with the result that the lower part of the face is disfigured.

Surely this is tragedy enough. But the effect of decayed teeth upon health is of far greater significance.

Dental Decay Does Extensive Damage

A decayed tooth is a poison factory, distributing its noxious product to every part of the body. In the body, that poison attacks and centers in the weakest spot.

It may lead to neuritis, rheumatic ailments, dyspepsia, or even duodenal ulcers. It may be a contributing cause of heart disease.

In view of such extensive damage, it is easy to understand why a prominent medical authority has declared that if the teeth were given proper care, so that dental decay became rare, instead of al-

Mrs. E. T. D.—Answering question as to the effect of vitamin D, this is a vitamin in the kitchen. Natural vitamin D is virtually absent in most foods, but in foods, or those to which D concentrate has been added, the vitamin D is stable and a nary cooking has little effect on it.

A Good Scout Never Whimpers

John Taylor, Troop 53 of Astoria, Long Island, grits his teeth and refuses to let a whimper get past his lips as an ambulance doctor sets his broken arm. His buddy, Scout Robert Ressiga, (left) whispers words of encouragement. John broke his arm in an impromptu baseball game while the Scout troop was on a hike.

A boy and a girl student of the class of zoology at the University of Ocala, Fla., as they look at a turtle while 20 feet below the surface. Clad in diving gear, the entire class took turns at exploring the springs' bottom as part of their nature studies.

LOUIS XIX?

Meet "Louis XIX," king of France and Navarre, duke of Normandy, Prince Louis Philippe of Bourbon, grandson of the lost Dauphin, who history says died in a Parisian prison during the French revolution, but who legend declares was spirited safely away to America. "King Louis XIX" earns his living as a night watchman in New Orleans and lives in a grimy boarding house, but stoutly proclaims he is the rightful heir to the throne of France.

In his announcement, Villeneuve noted that the location of the congress was well chosen. "Quebec is the cradle of the Canadian Church and North America's cradle of the Catholic faith."

Babes From the Woods

Orphaned when their mother was shot by a hunter in the Maine woods, these baby bears were found by a game warden near Augusta, and are being taken care of until able to fend for themselves. They are only a few weeks old. When they are a little more mature they will be released in the woods.

Corner Pennies for Tax Protest

AROUND THE HOUSE

To Keep the Sink White.—Use a soap jelly made by dissolving soap in warm water and adding a few tablespoons of kerosene. Keep this in a glass or wide-mouthed jar.

For Stained Hands.—Most vegetable stains can be removed from the hands by rubbing the stains with a slice of raw potato.

To Restore the Nap.—The nap on garments shiny from wear may be somewhat restored by sponging with a warm vinegar or ammonia solution made of one tablespoon of vinegar or ammonia to one quart of water.

Washing Fine Fabrics.—Wash with careful gentleness and squeeze in a thick towel instead of wringing them in the hands.

In a Pinch.—If the fountain pen runs dry and there is no ink on hand to fill it, fill the pen halfway with water. There is usually enough dry ink crystallized in the barrel to make a writing fluid sufficient for your purpose.

Just Another Bath.—Many times the canary can be induced to take a bath if a few seeds are sprinkled on top of the water in the tub. The bird will almost always repeat the bath if induced to take that first one.

OF ALL rag rugs the hooked type is the most fascinating and economical. A rag hook, such as may be purchased in notion and fancywork departments, and burlap a little larger than your finished rug are the essentials. Most rag hookers also use a frame of slats bolted together at the corners. They stretch the burlap over the frame and tack it. Some like a rather large stationary frame. Others use a small one and many hooked rugs are made without any frame at all.

Here is a quaint old rug pattern that you may mark off on your burlap with a yardstick and pencil. The numbers indicate the colors used for the original rug—now more than a hundred years old. The finished rug measures 26 by 34 inches. Allow two inches at all edges for hems. Overcast the edges, then mark the solid one-inch border just inside the hem allowance; then the large eight-inch squares; then the small two-inch squares; then draw the diagonal lines across the large squares as shown. Use wool rags if possible and cut the strips not wider than one-half inch. Hold the strip against the wrong side of the burlap and pull loops of it through to the right side with the hook as shown. Short strips are as useful as long. Just pull the ends through and clip them.

If you are planning slip covers, curtains, or doing other Spring sewing for the home, you will want a copy of Mrs. Spears' book, SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Forty-eight pages of practical working directions, with complete illustrations. A dollar saving book for every homemaker. Send name and address, enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred) to Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Terence Shea Tells of His Bulging Barrels

A social worker with more enthusiasm than tact went to call upon Terence Shea, night watchman, at his home.

"I hope, Mr. Shea," she said, "that you do not squander your money in riotous living. May I ask what you do with your wages?"

"I'd just as soon tell you as not," replied Mr. Shea. "'Tis $15 a week I make. When I've paid the rent, the provisions, and the milkman, and bought what's needed for Maggie and me five children, I deposit the rest of my money in barrels. Mostly, ma'am, sugar barrels. They're bigger an' hold more. But when I can't get them I use plain flour barrels."

High Explosives

The velocity of explosions varies tremendously. LOWE BROTHERS HIGH STANDARD HOUSE PAINT costs less per square foot of surface painted and outlasts ordinary paints—both of these merits are due to its high quality. Some low-grade paints analyzed by recognized laboratories were found to contain 63% of water and other evaporating liquids. This left only 37% of film-forming solids to protect the surface. Lowe Brothers' High Standard Liquid Paint contains 90% of protective film-forming solids. Be sure of better results and more pleasing effects before you paint. Annual Open House For School Patrons Fri. Eve

SCHOOL EXHIBIT TO BE HELD FRIDAY EVENING

The all-school exhibit and meeting of parents and teachers Friday night will be an evening of entertainment and education. It will provide an opportunity for school patrons to see many of the results of the year's work and to see some of the departments really in action.

Teachers will be in their rooms from seven o'clock to seven-thirty for conferences with any parents who care to talk to them. Between seven-thirty and eight o'clock they will be preparing for the program on the stage.

At eight o'clock the program will start in the gymnasium. Some of the numbers to be presented are:

- A Train Ride by the Primary Room.
- Songs by Grades 3 and 4
- A Miscellaneous Program by Grades 5, 6, 7 and 8
- A Speed Test by the Typing Class
- A Demonstration of Parliamentary Procedure by the Public Speaking Class
- Science Demonstrations
- A Style Show by the Home Economics Classes.

All of the grade rooms and some of the high school rooms will have on exhibit the special handwork and project work they have completed during the year. An exhibit of the furniture made in manual training will occupy a section of the gymnasium floor.

EXPECT 10,000 VISITORS FOR ANNUAL IOWA STATE VEISHEA

One of Iowa's most distinctive events—the annual Veishea celebration at Iowa State College—will be held at Ames, May 12-14. More than 10,000 visitors are expected for the 3-day festival.

Outstanding events of Veishea will be the open houses of most of the college's 45 academic departments, the parade of floats, a student vodvil, a spring concert and the annual Iowa High School Agricultural Congress and Iowa Homemaking Congress.

The latter events will be attended respectively by Iowa high school agricultural and home economics students.

Then annual state convention of the Future Farmers of America will be held during the agricultural congress.

PECK HANSON DROPS OUT OF RACE FOR SUPERVISOR

Mouse Circus Disbanded

The so called "mouse circus" which has been on display at the Northco Implement Store during the early spring, is no longer the circus it used to be.

It all came about when John Clemmons, who constructed the mouse circus, took the outfit to his sister's rural school near Armstrong.

Everything went fine until one morning Miss Clemmons noted there were only five mice where formerly there had been fourteen. Upon close observation she noted that the five mice had a contented look and also noticed a great number of mouse claws in the cage, with no mice attached to the claws. The mice had evidently staged a big free for all battle and the five remaining mice consumed the other nine.

That ended the circus.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. My total soil-depleting allotment is 100 acres. My corn allotment is 50 acres, leaving 50 acres for other depleting crops. I already have 60 acres planted to oats. Will I receive maximum payments if I only plant 40 acres of corn?

A. Yes. Since your 40 acres of corn are 80 per cent of your corn allotment you would receive your full corn and general depleting payments.

Q. I am farming a farm with 140 crop acres. My total soil-depleting allotment is 100 acres. I am spreading 30 tons of lime. Will I receive a soil-building payment for all the lime that I spread?

A. No. Your soil-building allowance would be 40 acres times 50 cents or $20.00. Your maximum soil-building payment on this farm would be $20.00, which would require 13.3 units of practice. A ton of lime equals one unit so you would only get paid for the spreading of 13.3 tons of lime. (If you have some non-crop open pasture on your farm, your maximum soil-building payment would be increased by 2 cents for each acre of such pasture, plus $1 for each animal unit of carrying capacity of the pasture on an annual basis.)

Q. I have a farm with 140 crop acres. My soil-depleting allotment is 100 acres. I am sowing 50 acres of sweet clover in the oats which I am harvesting for grain. Will I receive payments for the seeding of this 50 acres?

A. No. It is calculated the same as in the question above, only $20. are dependent upon the soil-building practices. The seeding of one acre of legumes or one acre of mixtures of perennial grasses except timothy and red top earns one unit of soil-building practice so in your example you would only receive a soil-building payment on 13.3 acres of this seeding. (Unless you had non-crop open pasture as stated above.)

Q. I am seeding 40 acres to timothy in my oats which I am harvesting for grain. How many soil-building units would this 40 acres earn?

A. Two acres of timothy earn one soil-building unit.

Q. I am sowing 20 acres of Hubam sweet clover this spring. Will these 20 acres of Hubam count toward achieving my soil-building goal if I harvest the Hubam for hay or seed?

A. Yes.

Q. I have just moved onto this farm on March 1st and I do not know the exact size of the field that I am planting to corn. If, due to an error in calculating the size of my fields, I find that I have over-planted my corn allotment one acre, will I be eligible for a corn loan?

A. The only safe thing to do is to carefully measure the fields which you are planting to corn.

Q. How does the national supply of corn on hand April 1st compare with the average supply on hand April 1st during the last 10-year period?

A. There is 1,067,678,000 on hand now. The 1927 to 1936 average is 793,082,000.

Q. Does the corn loan rate to be offered this fall depend on the carry-over or the current crop?

A. The corn loan rate to be of-

Over One Hundred Miles Of Electric Lines To Be Built Soon

BIDS LET FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ELECTRIC LINES

Bids for building lines for the Hancock county rural electric cooperative were opened Tuesday for the construction of approximately 115 miles of line.

Thirteen bids were received, and the four low bids were submitted by Sandberg and Johnson, of Iowa Falls, $80,115.07; Snyder and Johnson, of Humbolt, $81,808.42; Jensen Construction Company, of Kimballtown, $82,322.57; and Mattison and Wallock, of Oklahoma City, Okla., $82,572.95.

The board passed a resolution that the low bid submitted by Sandberg and Johnson be approved, and a contract let to this company.

Before construction can begin, however, approval must be secured from Washington, D. C.

Contractors urge that those who will be served by the project let individual contracts for wiring of their farms, since 60 per cent of the customers must be ready for service before the line can be energized.

The firm is holder of a contract to build the second part of the Franklin county project, and one of the partners in the firm, Carl Sandberg, is a former resident of Goodell, where his parents still reside.

M. C. James is president of the Hancock county REA, and V. L. Hein is project superintendent.

HELLO, FOLKS!

Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Graham are the parents of a baby girl born to them Friday night of the past week. The Graham family resides on the Linden Ranch east of Klemme.

A baby boy was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Waddingham at the Hampton hospital at Hampton Friday. Mr. and Mrs. Waddingham now have three children, all sons.

Mr. and Mrs. Klaas Ostendorf are the proud parents of a baby girl born to them Saturday morning, April 30th.

Whether this fall depends only on the number of bushels produced in the crop season of 1938. However, the marketing quota level is determined by taking into account both carry-over and current crop.

SENIOR CLASS PLAY RATED AS ONE OF BEST EVER PRODUCED HERE

Beautiful Costumes Add To Attractiveness Of Unusual Play

Many of those who saw the senior class play, "Another Spring," presented last Thursday and Friday nights, say that it was perhaps the best play ever attempted by amateur players in Klemme.

The play was unique in many ways and the special costumes used in portraying several of the characters, added to the beauty and dignity of the play.

All of the parts were well memorized and the character parts were well played. Miss Wallace is to be complimented for her part in directing the play and coaching the players.

A large crowd was present at each of the presentations. The special musical numbers under the direction of Martin Elstad were enjoyed by the audiences.

SENIOR CLASS ANNUAL SKIP DAY IS VISIT TO WATERLOO

Fifteen members of the Klemme High School Senior class, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Kingery, left early Tuesday morning on a trip to Cedar Falls and Waterloo. This trip was taken as the annual "skip day" of the senior class.

At Cedar Falls the group visited the Iowa State Teachers College and at Waterloo they visited factories and other places of interest and had a guide from the chamber of commerce to show them around.

Mrs. W. F. Pavey Proclaimed Best Bread Baker In Community

Mrs. W. F. Pavey was awarded a 49 pound sack of Omar flour at the Thada Store Saturday for having the best loaf of bread according to the judges.

Mrs. Wm. Wenz and Mrs. John Christians were both considered to be expert bakers by the judges who proclaimed a tie and those both were awarded the second prize.

Mrs. Hulda Albee received a ranking of third in the opinion of the judges.

$5 FOR BEST SLOGAN

The Klemme Civic Club will pay someone in this community $5 in cash for submitting a slogan for Klemme. The rules are simple:

Write your slogan on a one cent post card and mail to the Klemme Times before June 1st. One slogan only on a card, but you may send as many slogans as you want to. Neatness does not count. What the committee wants is a short, original, catchy slogan, and the shorter the better. The slogan should begin with the word "Klemme." For example, "Klemme, where you are welcome."

Get busy today and start mailing in your slogans. Anyone who resides in this trade territory is eligible to compete.

OBITUARY OF MRS. ELMER HOWARD WHO DIED LAST WEDNESDAY MORNING

Grace Burton was born February 16th, 1878, on a farm near Boone, Iowa, the second of a family of 11 children born to her parents Benjamin Burton and wife Melissa Jones.

She spent her childhood days and completed her common school education at Jewel Junction, Iowa.

As a child she attended the Christian Church with her parents and at the age of 16 she gave her heart to God and has lived a Christian life every since. She was a member of the Christian Church and later transferred her membership to the Methodist Church at Klemme.

During her younger years she was active in Sunday School work as a Teacher and also as an organizer of Sunday Schools. She lived her religion every day and always had a smile and a kindly word for everyone she met.

On December 28th, 1897, Grace Burton and Elmer Howard were married at the home of Henry Keitsker at Webster City. They commenced housekeeping on a farm near Afton, Iowa, where they lived one year. Then for five years they farmed near Montohr, Iowa, and for fifteen years near Albia, Iowa, after which they purchased a farm near Klemme, where they have now lived twenty-one years. To this union were born two daughters and two sons.

Mrs. Howard was a lover of Nature and always had a collection of potted plants, birds and goldfish in her home. She loved children, too and was a good mother to her family.

Mrs. Howard was under a doctor's care for several weeks, but was up and around until Wednesday, April 27th, when she quietly slipped away from this life and passed on to the Glory of a better world.

She attained the age of 60 years, 2 months and 11 days.

She leaves of her immediate family: her husband, Elmer Howard; her children, Mrs. John Graham, Searsboro, Iowa; Mrs. Howard Spiller, Liberty township; Robert Howard, Ventura, Iowa, and Ned Howard, Klemme; nine grandchildren; her mother, Mrs. Benjamin Burton, age 84, Lehigh, Iowa; her seven brothers, John, Will, Herbert and Martin, all living in the state of Washington; Jess and Leonard, at Boone, Iowa; and Verner at Fort Dodge, Iowa; her two sisters, Mrs. Blanche Betchel, Lehigh, Iowa, and Mrs. Mary Griffith, Exeter, California, and other relatives and friends.

NORTHERN LUMBER CO. IS CELEBRATING ANNIVERSARY

Thirty-five years ago this week the Northern Lumber Company established its home office and lumber yards in Estherville. Officials of the local company this week are observing the birthday.

The first Northern Lumber Company yard was established at Thompson, 46 years ago, but it was not until 11 years later that F. J. White and G. A. Lyons purchased the W. H. Jensen company yards on S. 6th St. where the present company now does business.

In addition to the Estherville yards, the Northern company also operates lumber yards at Gruver, Swea City, Forest City, Klemme, Mason City and New Hampton.

During its 35 years of business in Estherville the company has furnished building material for many homes and new business buildings, not only in Estherville, but in much surrounding territory. Its growth has been such that the company has built many additions to its own "home" and it is now recognized as one of the finest and best equipped yards in the northwest.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Dear Editor: I wish I could dodge writing a column this week. The whole "On Our Way" Washington picture is so disturbed; the course is so uncertain; the future is so indefinite, that I must confess my inability to properly appraise and report on the situation. You will remember President Roosevelt once wrote a book which bore the title, "On Our Way." I guess that is correct as it applies to the national government now; only I can not figure out what the way is or where we are going.

To explain in some detail what my personal problem is, let me say that before I write each week, I have canvassed many, many people's opinions and have obtained the facts that are necessary for the discussion which I undertake. There has been no change in my method of work. Yet, I find myself ten days after Mr. Roosevelt has announced his new and larger spending program totally unable to get heads or tails of the story. That is to say, I have found both the heads and the tails but none of the heads or the tails seem to be from the same carcasses. They don't fit.

So, therefore, I must write that I have found nobody who has been able to tell me where we are going. I listened to Mr. Roosevelt's radio speech and read his message to congress about the $3,012,000,000 which he proposes to spend to stop the depression; I talked with officials of the Treasury and members of the federal reserve board of governors about the billion and a half of idle gold that is to be made "active" again, and I have looked into the program by the Reconstruction Finance corporation which is prepared to loan almost two billions to commerce and industry. There is so much activity about it, among the executive departments, that it seems something must come of it. There is activity at the capitol, too, but it is in the nature of a row over the question whether all of this spending will do any good.

The one tangible thing evident around the capitol is that perhaps 40 per cent of the representatives and senators have been left rather cold by the idea of a great new spending program. Somehow, they look back on the previous pump priming operations and they tell me that the pump was primed by a total of about eight billion dollars without causing the water to flow freely as a good, streamlined New Deal pump ought to work. These things they are saying in committee consideration of the various phases of the new program by which the President expects to bring back prosperity—or, at least, by which he hopes to check the depression.

There is a depression now. That may not be news particularly, but it is now official. It was a "recession" for some seven or eight months, according to all official pronouncements, but now that soft word has grown claws and it has become a bold, bad depression. It is too bad that the depression had to come just when congressional elections lay ahead. Of course, there can be no connection between the spending campaign and the elections! Not being able to analyze the situation—a fact admitted at the start—I naturally would be the last to say that retention of house or senate seats is as important as providing funds for relief of the destitute, loans or grants to states, cities, counties or businesses that might otherwise find votes against New Deal candidates. We must forget that phase.

Now, obviously, being one who is unable to understand what is going on, what the plans are if it is planned that way, I should wait and see what will come out of the pump this time. But I am impatient. I am rather cynical, too. Whenever these things have failed to work once, I naturally have to be shown why they failed once and will work the second or the third or the fourth time they are tried. Around many of the New Deal propaganda bureaus, however, I have been assured that the vast spending plan will work this time. Indeed, it was intimated to me that I was rather stupid, just plain dumb, because I failed to understand. Really, the assurances given me by the press agents has had much more conviction than Mr. Roosevelt's speech.

One reader of my column wrote in the other day to inquire whether I believed all of this spending meant we are headed into inflation. At the moment, I am not much alarmed about that. All of the makings for a fine inflationary period are available. I mean that if congress were to be stampeded by the confusion that I have mentioned, there could be a regular flood of printing-press money. Congress, however, is not going to be stampeded. The sentiment is too evenly divided for and against the idea of spending our way back to prosperity. There are individuals in congress who actually think that the public debt of the nation is already too large. They think really that the new spending ought to be limited just to caring for the distressed unemployed. Of all things, they would refuse to vote out more money unless that money were to be used for feeding and clothing people.

I think I should mention also that there are a goodly number of persons at the capitol who have lowered themselves to the level of playing politics. They are even ridiculing our President. They are saying that most businesses, little as well as big, have lost confidence in Mr. Roosevelt and that it does not matter whether the New Deal spends one billion or ten, it will fail to restore that confidence. Being a simple-minded soul, I just stand by and listen to that. On the other hand, the heads of three important magazine publishing houses have told me lately that their advertising contracts are being cancelled right and left. The national advertisers have told the publishers they have to conserve what money they have because they don't know what is going to happen.

I do not understand why they are so frightened. You will remember Mr. Roosevelt said he had urged congress to enact only four laws that would affect business. That is, four this session. One of these is the bill, as described by the President, "to put a floor under wages and a ceiling over the hours of labor." All that legislation would do, of course, is bankrupt businesses here and there. But those can't be successful anyway. They haven't made any money in several years and why worry about them.

The message of the President did not make any mention of the laws that hold the country back. It is to be assumed he did not want to disturb business by calling attention to them. Matters of taxation, for instance. I am told in this connection that the tax rates must go higher next year. There is going to be a much larger deficit in the Treasury than was anticipated in January when I wrote in these columns how the budget was going to be balanced next year under plans outlined by the President. Something slipped in those plans. Now, they don't know at the Treasury when the budget can be balanced. Surely, not next year, because here is something more than three billions to be spent out of next year's money supplies that had not been counted on. This hateful depression is causing so much trouble!

I hope I have not made this Washington situation appear too mixed up. The circumstance has me quite puzzled, as I have plainly tried to say.

There has been a story, a rumor, in circulation in Washington about a tiff between Mr. Roosevelt and Vice President Garner. Not that I believe in recording mere rumor, but more because of a sentence that was reportedly used by Mr. Garner, I want to write about it. The Vice President is a lovable soul, kind and amiable. He has a number of Texas expressions that appeal to me because they say so much in so few words.

Well, according to the rumor, Mr. Garner and a group of congressional leaders were in conference with the President. They were talking about the depression, or maybe the recession. What to do about it; how to meet it, and what the causes were. The President, it seems, has been sold the idea of this spending program as an aid to business, a priming of the pump. Rumor has it that Mr. Garner was asked what he thought could be done. His reply, a typical Garner answer, was: "Why don't you let the cattle put on some fat, Chief."

The President was reportedly quite displeased with the idea conveyed, an idea that the government had better quit harrassing business, quit trying to remake the country and reform human nature. Mr. Roosevelt subsequently denied the report vehemently, even rather angrily. There has been no denial or confirmation from Mr. Garner. He has been so silent about the thing that it is positively thunderous. As I said, I know of it only as rumor, but I do know that Mr. Garner's silence has convinced thousands of persons that there is some basis in fact for the report. In any event, the astute Vice President, if he made the remark, certainly said "a mouf full."

So, Mr. Editor, if you are still with me, let me say that the new spending program is going to be no more successful in restoring the country to prosperity than the earlier attempts. The nation can spend $450,000,000 in constructing new public buildings. Suppliers of material will sell that brick and stone and cement and plumbing supplies, etc. But after the job is done, darkness falls again and the men are out of work.

BATTLE OF MICROPHONES

Government Short Wave Propaganda Machines Now Fight Wars Once Waged With Guns; — Even Uncle Sam Does His Part!

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

One hundred years ago Italy and Great Britain might have gone to war over their current differences in northern Africa. Today they forsake armed force in favor of a more subtle—and more effective—weapon. Short wave radio broadcasts are fighting the war in Palestine, just as Russia and Germany are adopting an aerial offensive against each other.

The whole world is engaged in a terrific battle of microphones, fighting with unending streams of propaganda that preach conflicting political philosophies into the beleaguered listener's ear.

Americans know of this battle; they know how Russia, Great Britain, Italy and Germany are leading the attack with powerful transmitters that emit propaganda 24 hours a day, aimed at every nation on earth.

What many Americans do not realize is that their own nation is in the thick of the fray, preaching the "American way" to impress foreign listeners with the soundness of democratic government. When President Roosevelt delivered his state-of-the-Union message to congress last winter, his words were sped to every corner of the earth by the National Broadcasting company and the Columbia Broadcasting System, in a series of transmissions and re-transmissions that lasted until noon next day.

How Europe Does It. Yet this display of propagandizing is but a tempest in a teacup compared with Europe's business-like procedure. Almost every Old World nation has its governmental department devoted to preaching political doctrine.

Germany, like other nations, has a definite "policy" of propaganda. Its broadcasts, by intensely powerful short wave, are directed first to reach "colonies" of overseas Germans wherever they may be, making them conscious of their ties to the fatherland and preaching Nazi philosophy. Germany's second purpose is to build "good will," and third, to boast of the Nazi union's greatness and the justice of her aspirations.

"Jamming" the Air Waves. Naturally, one of Germany's biggest radio battles is with Russia, from whence come mighty surges of propaganda daily, aimed at Nazi receivers and preaching the Communist doctrine. Germany's counter procedure is to "jam" the air by filling the wave length with a noise so loud that it drowns the Moscow speaker.

More dramatic by far was the recent radio clash between Great Britain and Italy. In Palestine, where revolts between Arabs and Jews have been commonplace and distressing, Great Britain charged Italy was fomenting trouble, wooing the Arabs via short wave broadcast. It was discovered that someone had thoughtfully provided Arabs with hundreds of radio sets, conveniently locked so that only Italian stations could be tuned in.

Great Britain immediately leveled powerful transmissions at the Arabs. She, too, distributed receivers, locked so the owners could tune only British programs.

Broadcasting "Culture." Irrespective of the doctrines they preach, the short wave barons employ similar tactics. Political speeches would become tiresome, so music is often interspersed.

The favorite means of disseminating propaganda is through "news reports." Interesting and informative, these broadcasts provide sugar-coated pills of bias for the credulous listener.

Broadcasts are usually made in several languages. Italy transmits in English, Spanish, Serbian, Chinese, Japanese, Turkish, Greek, French, Portuguese and Albanian.

Few continents are more courted by broadcasters than South America. Mussolini, catering to the Latin kinship of his listeners, is making a heavy play for our southern neighbors. But he must combat equally strong efforts on the part of Moscow, Germany and Great Britain. The latter nation has just completed new transmitters for broadcasts in Spanish and Portuguese to 85,000,000 South Americans.

Brazilian Education. But the South Americans themselves appreciate radio's value in propagandizing. In Brazil, every radio station must carry a government program from 6:45 to 7:45 p. m. each day, prepared by the department of propaganda. South America is a natural hotbed of politics, because both Hitler and Mussolini enjoy encouraging the trend to absolutism now prevalent in that continent.

But the United States, conscious of South America's proximity, is not twiddling its thumbs.

Both NBC and Columbia have established international broadcasting departments. The former operates 16 hours a day via short wave in six languages, Spanish, Italian, French, German, English and Portuguese. The programs are "designed to provide America's challenge to elaborate short wave systems broadcast programs throughout the world from powerful stations in Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Russia, France and Holland."

Licensed Receivers. By contrast, two other democracies—Great Britain and France—have government-operated systems which derive their revenue from listeners' licenses. With domestic radio under federal control, foreign short wave broadcasts can easily be justified as a supplementary service to colonists and other "interested parties."

In the world's mad attempt to contact people with short wave can be read two opposing purposes. The kindlier explanation is that foreign broadcasts are breaking down national boundaries and creating a greater understanding among the peoples of the earth.

Unfortunately, such is not the case.

Observers are convinced that in the last analysis radio is being boomed as part of a general preparation for war. When and if a conflict does come, these vast communication systems will be of inestimable importance. Even as they are fought now, battles may be waged through the ether. Threats will be hurled to the enemy and counter-threats received. Germany's experience in the World war, when her cables were cut and communication facilities were destroyed, proves that the greater the number of channels of communication under a country's control, the stronger the position of that nation in the event of war.

Some say that radio favors the democracy in propaganda wars, because dictators refuse to risk the loss of that hypnotic effect afforded by personal appearances.

If such is the case, Great Britain, France and the United States may come through victorious in the current hostilities. But who can discount the threat of Europe, where only three out of thirty national broadcasting systems are privately owned and operated?

Lesson for May 8

CO-OPERATING IN SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 9:30-41.
GOLDEN TEXT—For he that is not against us is on our part.—Mark 9:40.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When We Want to Be First.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Not in Our Class.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Working with Others for Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Co-operating in Service.

That there is strength in united and co-operative effort is a truth so obvious that in the affairs of the home and of the office we would not attempt to make progress with "a house divided against itself." But with strange and destructive inconsistency some who are engaged in the propagation of the Christian faith, and often the very folk who speak much of love and fellowship and sacrificial service, fight one another with cunning and often bitterness of spirit, and all in the name of Christ whom they profess to serve.

No one who is awake to the real issue involved would ask any true believer to co-operate in Christian work with those who, while holding the name and outward symbols of the followers of Christ, deny His deity and His Word. But surely there is need for loving co-operation between all those who truly love the Lord, who believe in Him and in His Word.

I. A Dispute by the Way (vv. 30-34).

Jesus had taken His disciples from the Mount of Transfiguration by secluded roads through Galilee so that He might instruct them in the all-important truths regarding His death and resurrection. One could hardly conceive of a more propitious arrangement for their growth both in knowledge and grace. Did they profit by it? No; they not only did not understand what He told them but they used their time to dispute "among themselves who should be the greatest" (v. 34).

Possibly James, Peter, and John were a bit puffed up by their experience on the Mount, or perhaps the others were jealous because Jesus had taken them with Him. Or perchance it was just another unprovoked expression of the sinful pride that is so close to the surface of the human heart and mind.

II. An Example of Humility (vv. 35-37).

"True greatness consists not in attaining the first place in the notice and praise of the world, not in being served by many, but in being willing to stoop down to a humble place, not for the sake of self-effacement, not in timid diffidence, but in order to serve others for the sake of Christ" (Erdman).

Note carefully that it is the receiving of a little one in the name of Christ that brings to us the glory of His presence with us. Every deed of kindness and love is commendable and has its own reward, but there is a vast difference between it and humble service in the name and for the glory of Christ.

III. A Lesson in Co-operation (vv. 38-41).

John, quick to apprehend spiritual truth, sees in the teaching of Christ concerning the little child the condemnation of something he had done. "If indeed it be true that to receive a child, an ordinary everyday child, is to receive Christ, and to receive God," said John within himself, "what did I do when I forbade that man who in the Name was casting out a demon? Verily, the light had broken in upon him."

The man who casts out demons, or who gives the disciple of Jesus a cup of water, in His name—that is with true faith in Christ, and in His power, and for His glory—must be a believer. He may not belong to our group or circle, he may not speak our language, he may not use our methods, but if he is serving Christ we should not forbid him or speak evil of him. God has at times called a man to witness for Him, who has done so in a manner distasteful to others, and these in turn have aligned themselves against him and hindered his full usefulness in the gospel. One of the great evangelists of the last generation used methods which shocked many church folk. They stood against him, and yet that man was used to win hosts of business and professional men that the church had scarcely touched, into earnest Christian testimony and service which continues to this day. You and I may not like one another's appearance, or voice, or methods, but let us love and co-operate with one another for Christ's sake!

The Word of God will stand a thousand readings; and he who has gone over it most frequently is the surest of finding new wonders there. —J. Hamilton.

New and Pretty Fashions

AND you can make them for yourself with the greatest of ease! Send for the patterns right off—even if you haven't done much sewing, they're quick and hands in the dishpan—or any other time—and it completely protects your dresses from spatters and spots. Make it of linen, gingham or percale and trim it with bright braid.

Dress With Bolero.

This charming dress has details that belong in the very forefront of fashion—you see them in the most expensive models. The shirring at the waistline, the flare of the skirt, the wide shoulders, with puff sleeves, the whole effect of swing and gaiety, make it smartest of the smart! In silk print, flat crepe, taffeta or (for summer wear) linen or sheer silk, this dress will be lovely. Be sure to wear a flower at the neckline, too.

The Patterns.

1479 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 1½ yards of 35-inch material, with 5 yards of bias banding or braid to trim.

1478 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material for the dress and 1½ yards of 39-inch material for the jacket.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart which enables even a beginner to cut and make her own clothes. Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

easy to follow. Each is accompanied by a complete and detailed sew chart that answers your every question.

Gay and Perky Apron.

It's exactly right to call this pretty apron a "fashion," because it fits as well as a dress and has an animated charm of its own. It positively will not slip off the shoulders when you have both

AROUND the HOUSE Items of Interest to the Housewife

Preserving the Oilcloth.—Bind the edges of oilcloth used for table coverings with bias tape. This will keep the edges from tearing or becoming ragged.

Hemming Sash Curtains.—Make the hems of sash curtains the same at the top and bottom. You can then use them either end up.

When Painting Molding.—A piece of heavy cardboard is handy for the amateur painter to hold under the molding to protect the wall paper.

To Retain Juices in Meats.—To keep flavor and juices in meat when baking or frying, expose it to extreme heat first, then reduce the temperature and cook more slowly.

Preparing Baked Potatoes.—Baked potatoes look much nicer if scooped from the shell, mashed with butter, pepper and salt, a well-beaten yolk of an egg, then placed back in the half shell and browned in the oven. They not only look nicer, but taste better.

Rinse Silks Well.—Silk underthings should be washed in water that is barely warm, and should be rinsed in at least three fresh rinsing waters.

Attractive Garnish.—As a garnish, lemon slices may be sprinkled with paprika, rolled in chopped parsley, or mint or striped with pimiento.

For That Musty Odor.—To remove a musty odor from a room, put a drop of oil of lavender into the corners.

When Someone Is Ill.—Always wrap a rubber hotwater bottle in soft cloth before placing in a patient's bed. Place the bottle near but not against the patient's flesh. If placed too close the patient may be burned before realizing it.

Hidden Benefits

Few housewives realize the underlying advantage of the use of a good light-oil furniture polish! Most polish is used only for the luster it bestows on the chairs, tables, piano, woodwork in the home. Rubbing the polish on cleans the furniture—works up a glow—and the outward effect is fresh and sparkling! But that is only part of the housewife's reward. For out of this domestic routine comes definite benefit to the furniture! A reputable polish, with a light oil base, does what is known as "feeding" the finish. The "massage" causes the oil to penetrate, seep into the pores of the wood—just enough to lubricate—and keep it healthy! Here, it is important to note that cheap polishes are made with a heavy oil base—and are "greasy" and unpleasant to use. The best polish—made with a fine light-oil base—is never greasy. Applied on a damp cloth (according to directions), it is neat to use and proves a boon to the furniture! Lack of polishing—or the use of a poor polish—will cause the finest wood to dry out, crack, split—for wood is a product of Nature and needs a certain amount of oily moisture. So polish the furniture regularly! Use a quality oil polish—it pays! For not only does the furniture look better—it is better! Its life is preserved!

PURPOSE gives man a new impulse, a new interpretation to life. Purpose makes man his own second creator and by it he can make himself largely what he will. He can choose his own sphere, he can live in the mud of low desires or rise to the greatest heights of noble ideals. Purpose makes man a fighter for something. He grows greater in his efforts to reach and grasp hold of some ideal which to others may seem unattainable. To him the inspiration and the glow of the struggle means more than the victory. Purpose is a concentration of the mind to attain an end. Before it can be greatest there must be unity of body, mind, heart, and soul.

Too many of us who are held down by the cares of mere living, the carrying out of our greatest ideals may be impossible. But we should all have a purpose and we should live up to it as nearly as possible. One purpose, for instance, which we all can have is faithfulness in little things. This alone may change the life of an individual. The conquest of a weakness in character, the care of a home and family to overcome the habit of drifting are purposes which anyone can possess.

Purpose puts a man on the stage of real action. Instead of being a spectator he becomes an actor with a real part in the great play of life. We should all have a purpose even if we do not attain it, for the great thing is not so much in realizing it as in fighting for it.

MUSIC NEWS

The band received an invitation to attend and participate in the Third North Iowa Band Festival which will be held at Mason City Tuesday, June 21 1938. In a general way the festival will follow the same pattern as those of the past two years. There will be the morning parade at 11:00 o'clock, half-hour concerts in the park at the music hall, and night program at the stadium with massed band features. To make it a pleasant day for the visiting bands, the YMCA, YWCA, and theatre courtesies will be extended and each band will be furnished luncheon. A special North Iowa Band Festival march has been composed for this occasion by J. Berryman and this will lead the list of massed band numbers which each band is requested to become familiar. Others are "Military Escort" by Fillmore, "Officer of the Day," by Hall and "F. Captain," by Sousa plus "Crossed March," by Fillmore and "Washington Post March" by Sousa. The mayor of our city, the president of our Board of Education and the superintendent of our school are invited and will be given places of honor in the parade. All band members are looking forward to this occasion with great pleasure.

PASTORAL GLEANINGS:—

I'll Take What Father Takes

There is a story of a father who took his little boy one morning into the city where he transacted his business. When noon came, he took his boy to a restaurant where he often had lunch. The waiter, on receiving the order, knowing it was the man's custom to have a bottle of wine, asked the boy what he would have to drink. The boy replied, “I'll take what father takes.”

The father, realizing the seriousness of the situation, quietly beckoned the waiter and countermanded the order for liquor.

During the afternoon when he went to his office, the words of the boy, “I'll take what father takes,” were constantly ringing in his ears. He went back to his home rather troubled, and after dinner retired to his study, but he could not work, for he could not forget the words of his boy, “I'll take what father takes.”

Feeling that he could bear it no longer he determined to settle the matter. He knelt down and prayed to God for guidance, and from that night he resolved that he would never touch drink again, or anything that might be a source of danger to others—The Watchword

Static Electricity Used Commercially in Separating Ores

New York.—Every small boy who has ever rubbed a piece of sealing wax with cat's fur and attracted to it bits of paper knows that in the forces of static electricity lies one means of separating materials. Small boys, grown up to become mining engineers, long ago realized that somehow static electricity might be used commercially to separate valuable from worthless ores.

The idea is old, of course, but it never has been applied widely and successfully to large scale separation of ores as have the magnetic methods.

The trouble in those early days was that the sources of electricity—the old-fashioned Wimshurst machines and so on—were ineffective. Later the use of transformers and mechanical rectifiers of current arrived and some improvement came also. But as H. B. Johnson reports to the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, there has been little development in the last ten years despite great advances in the radio and vacuum tube art in that decade.

How the Separator Works.

Mr. Johnson has studied the electro-static separation of over 90 different elements with a simple and ingenious apparatus. The mineral mixture to be separated feeds down a hopper onto the surface of a rotating cylinder charged electrically positive. Nearby this cylinder is another one charged with electricity of the opposite sign by using a full-wave high-voltage rectifying tube. The voltage created sets up a strong electric field that pulls the falling particles out of line in their vertical fall and makes them drop on the other side of a suitable vertical dividing sheet of material. Thus one component of the mixture falls on the one side and the unattracted particles on the other.

Mineral granules of the size obtained in commercial grinding machines were used in the tests. One difficult separation achieved was dust from anthracite dust. Among the difficult separations made possible were those of separating galena from pyrite, muscovite from lepidolite (both micas), and calcite from dolomite.

Enormous Weddell Seals Are Displayed in Chicago

Chicago.—Weddell seals, rarest swimming mammals in museum collections, killed in the Antarctic by Admiral Richard E. Byrd's most recent expedition, have been placed on display at the Field Museum of Natural History here.

Reaching a length of nine feet, and weighing up to 900 pounds, the Weddell seal, only mammal except the whale found in the Antarctic, is seldom seen in museums because of its inaccessible home. The Field Museum collection is probably the only habitat group of these seals anywhere. Mounted by staff taxidermist, C. J. Albrecht, and displayed in an "environment" prepared by Arthur G. Rueckert, the seals are arranged to appear "at home" in the museum case.

Creeping with extreme difficulty and violent wormlike undulations, the Weddell seal goes inland as much as eight miles during the Antarctic summer, when the 65-pound, open-eyed young are born. Nourished by its mother's milk, the young Weddell seal gains as much as seven pounds daily, and after three weeks or so is able to go "on its own," its woolly first coat replaced by a sleek fur of gray or brown with irregularly placed spots of other colors.

Gold Mining Process Used in a Limestone Quarry

New York.—Hydraulic monitors, long used to break up tough gravels in California's rich gold fields, now are employed in a South Carolina limestone quarry to remove tough red clay from channels cut into the rock by long-vanished streams, says Dr. Mary Sheppard, United States bureau of mines engineer, describing the process in Mining Technology.

Channels in the limestone, some of them 30 feet deep and 8 feet wide, were formerly cleared of clay by hand labor, a prohibitively expensive and time-consuming process. Now, with roaring streams of water, the tough clay is broken up and washed away at the low cost of about $1.00 a cubic yard and with very little hand labor.

Better Diets Will Help to Conserve Our Human Resources

By JANE STAFFORD

Washington.—Conservation, to most of us, suggests such things as taking care of our forests and fuel supplies, flood prevention measures, wild life refuges and other activities to preserve or conserve our natural resources. The idea of conserving human resources is somewhat novel.

This very idea, however, was the subject of a recent conference in the nation's capital. Experts on population, eugenics, public health, birth control and psychiatry sat down together and tried to figure out what the nation's human resources are and how they can be conserved.

Food, well chosen and in abundant quantity, is an important feature of any program for conservation of human resources, Dr. Hazel K. Stiebeling of the United States bureau of home economics told the conference.

"Fully adequate diets are a conservation measure in the finest sense of the word," she declared.

"Protective" Foods Needed. Such diets, she pointed out, can raise health from levels generally accepted as average or usual to definitely superior planes. Observations on generation after generation of laboratory animals show that superior diets result in more rapid rate of growth in the young, larger size at all ages, better success in rearing the young, greater resistance to infection, and longer life. Some short-time observations, Doctor Stiebeling said, tend to show that human animals respond to diets in much the same way as the laboratory animals.

The chief difference between these superior diets and the usual inadequate diets is in the amount of the foods nutrition experts call "protective." These foods are fruits and green vegetables and milk and milk products (butter, cheese, buttermilk, etc.). Conserving human resources by diet means, Doctor Stiebeling pointed out, increasing the purchase power of low income groups and teaching all groups the importance of eating plenty of fruits, green vegetables and milk.

Vanadium Obtained From Steamship Flue Deposits

Bridgeville, Pa.—Vanadium, hard-to-get steel-alloying metal, usually mined at high labor cost and other expense in out-of-the-way desert and jungle regions, is now being produced at the rate of 200,000 pounds annually from the flue deposits of steamships burning Venezuelan oil, reports Jerome Strauss, vice president of the Vanadium Corporation of America, producer and importer of this rare metal.

Vanadium occurs in very small and quite variable amounts in almost all crude petroleum, he reports, but only the Venezuelan and Mexican oils provide enough vanadium to be of commercial value.

In recent years, this vanadium-bearing petroleum has been burned by steamships, and the non-inflammable vanadium oxide left behind with the soot and coke, from which it is recovered when the burners of the steamships are cleaned.

Occurring in concentrations of from 5 to 25 per cent in these soots and cokes, the vanadium oxide is extracted in the United States, Japan and England.

North Carolina Has Vast Supply of Ore of Lithium

Raleigh, N. C.—Millions of tons of spodumene, ore of featherlight, silvery lithium, lightest metal known, have been located in North Carolina, near Kings mountain, of Revolutionary war fame, since the first discovery of the crystalline white mineral by Frank Hess, United States bureau of mines geologist, in 1936.

Hundreds of thousands of tons stick up above the ground, where they can be cheaply quarried, and more lies near the surface, reports Herman J. Bryson, North Carolina state geologist. These deposits are the largest known in the world.

Lithium is used as a hardener in lead and aluminum alloys and in various medicines. Its compounds are used in pottery and glass manufacture, storage battery electrolytes, photographic processes, as a coloring agent in signal flares, and in several chemical processes.

Lettuce Seed Helped by Chemical Treatment

Washington.—Dormant lettuce seed will germinate much more freely if treated chemically before planting, Dr. Ross C. Thompson and William F. Koser of the Department of Agriculture have discovered.

Most successful of the chemicals used was thiourea. A ½ per cent solution of this compound caused the germination of 94 per cent of the seeds tested, as compared with a little less than 23 per cent in the case of "control" lots of seed treated only with water.

- ★ Ash-Sifting Diva
- ★ Jolson, Model Mayor
- ★ "Beau Geste" Again

By Virginia Vale

CHARLOTTE LANSING, whose lovely soprano voice you must have heard over NBC, has become an ashes-sifter. When she's not singing, she's sifting ashes in Princeton, N. J., and holding her breath.

You see, her home burned to the ground in January, just after she had collected all her worldly goods under one roof. And she had about $4,000 worth of jewels in the house. Hence the ashes sifting.

She estimates that she has gone through about two tons of ashes up to date, and she has found rings and pins which she values at $2,000.

Irene Wicker, radio's Singing Lady, accidentally cut down the high cost of living the other day. She was walking in Central park on her way from one side of New York to the other when she saw a tiny patch of chives. She dug them up, went home, chopped them up with cottage cheese and ate them. And the friend who'd asked her to luncheon in one of the town's smartest hotels worried all afternoon because Irene had no appetite for the chef's masterpieces.

Some day Al Jolson may abandon radio and the screen, but there's one job he'll always have, if the inhabitants of Eneino, Calif., have anything to say about it. Since he's been their mayor he has secured for the town a system of street lighting, many miles of paved streets and the promise of an up-to-date fire department.

Rochelle Hudson is making the most of her vacation. She has taken an apartment in New York and is seeing the town as if she'd never seen it before. The town's appreciating her too; New York university made her "Queen of the Prom."

Olivia de Havilland avoided reporters when she sailed recently from New York for England, by using the name "Lavinia Halliday." She also gave her friends something to think about, before she left, by intimating that she was going abroad to see someone quite special—that someone being her fiancé, according to good authority, who is a foreigner and has a title.

Perhaps a wave of remakes has hit the Hollywood studios. "Beau Geste," one of Ronald Colman's most beloved pictures, is to reach the screen again, with Gary Cooper in the title role. If you have any old favorites that you'd like to see screened with new actors, why not write the studios about them? Many fans have wondered why some company hasn't done a remake of "The Copperhead." As a silent years ago starring Lionel Barrymore, it is remembered as one of the most effective pictures of the time.

ODDS AND ENDS—Trained carp appear in "Marco Polo"; they had to be taught to eat out of Sigrid Gurie's hands. Republic has actually found a story for Gloria Swanson's attempt at a comeback—usually, after companies signed her, they couldn't get a suitable story. RKO is grooming Mitzi Green for stardom, apparently. The next De Mille spectacle will be based on the story of the Union Pacific. Anna May Wong is selling her collection of screen souvenirs to raise money for the Chinese victims of the war with Japan. Gary Cooper plays a scene in a straitjacket in "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife"; he was wearing it one day when the whistle blew for lunch—and his co-workers got a laugh by going off and leaving him in it. Paul Taylor, director of numerous radio shows, decided to be a singer when he was fourteen years old, and sang before an evangelical convention of 6,000 people. Thirteen-year-old Junior O'Day, of the "Big Sister" program, began his career on the air when he was seven. Joan Blaine, chosen as radio's best-dressed woman, declares that her most fashionable hat is made from an old one of her brother's. Frank Black and his wife have adopted a baby boy.

What to Eat and What to Avoid

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses LAXATIVE FOODS

Nationally Known Authority on Food Shows How Right Diet Can Help You to Avoid Health Hazards of Faulty Elimination

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 30th Street, New York.

THOUSANDS of men, women and children are alive today because we have learned how to prevent many types of infections and how to cure diseases which once caused untimely deaths.

We have reason to be proud of the achievements of science in fighting disease and lengthening the span of life. But we should be ashamed of the fact that hundreds of thousands of individuals are not getting the most out of life—indeed they are not realizing half their potentialities—because improper eating and faulty habits of hygiene cause them to suffer from that great evil of civilization—constipation.

EVILS OF CONSTIPATION

Someone has called constipation the most deadly disease, and while this may seem like an extreme statement, it becomes justifiable when one realizes the untold misery and wretchedness that may result when food residues remain to stagnate and putrefy in the body.

Constipation muddies the complexion, dulls the eye and befogs the brain. It causes a general feeling of discomfort and fullness in the abdomen, lack of appetite, bad breath, coated tongue, a feeling of lassitude and a tendency to become easily fatigued.

By weakening resistance, it opens the way to numberless diseases. Serious complications, such as irritation of the appendix, may occur as a result of the friction of hard masses of waste against the delicate walls of the intestine. Piles have frequently been laid at the door of faulty elimination.

Do you wonder that I consider prompt, regular elimination the keystone of good health?

Its importance is readily understood when you consider the processes by which food is digested and absorbed.

FATE OF FOOD IN THE BODY

From the mouth, food passes down the esophagus into the stomach, where it is penetrated by the gastric juice. It then passes into the small intestine where it is mixed with the secretions of the liver and the pancreas. Here the nutritive elements are absorbed by minute, hair-like tubes which line the intestinal walls. These tubes converge into the blood vessels and lymphatics which transport nourishment to all parts of the body.

Undigested residues pass into the large intestine or colon, where they are normally moved along by a series of muscular contractions known as peristalsis, and finally evacuated.

The amount of the evacuation varies in bulk with the amount of indigestible roughage contained in the food. When there is insufficient bulk to promote normal peristalsis, waste accumulates and we have the condition known as constipation with all its resulting evils. Bacteria prey upon the stagnating material, producing poisons which may be absorbed by the body.

There is not the slightest excuse for allowing this condition to develop. For the misery and wretchedness of constipation may easily be avoided by including in the daily diet sufficient laxative foods, that is, those rich in fiber or cellulose.

BULK OR FIBER ESSENTIAL

Because of their fibrous framework, plant foods are our chief source of cellulose or bulk, and therefore, our greatest aid in promoting normal elimination. Vegetables and fruits are sworn foes of constipation, and unrefined cereals are also extremely valuable.

SOME LAXATIVE FOODS

Foods with an exceptionally high residue include raw fruits, especially those with skins and seeds; dried fruits, as apricots, prunes, figs and raisins; raw vegetables; such cooked vegetables as onions and leafy greens; the legumes, that is, dried peas and beans; whole grain cereals and bran.

Among the vegetables, don't overlook cabbage, lettuce, celery, spinach, brussels sprouts, string beans and green peas.

Foods which tend to form a little gas in the intestines, including spinach, onions and cauliflower, are also useful stimulants to intestinal movement.

In addition to providing cellulose, the acid fruits, such as oranges, lemons and grapefruit, act as a mild stimulus to increased peristaltic motions.

NEED FOR VITAMIN B

Another important factor in promoting normal elimination is vitamin B, which has been shown to be essential for good muscular tone and activity of the digestive tract. Investigations with experimental animals have demonstrated that it requires twice as long to empty the large intestine when the diet is deficient in vitamin B. Yeast, egg yolk, milk, whole grain cereals, liver and green leafy vegetables are good sources of this vitamin.

LIQUIDS ESSENTIAL

A sufficient quantity of liquids is likewise necessary to prevent the contents of the lower intestine from becoming too hard for easy evacuation. In addition to water, the diet should therefore contain an abundance of milk, fruit juices and other beverages. Acidophilus milk and buttermilk are especially beneficial.

Fats and oils, used in moderation, act as gentle lubricants.

REGULAR HABITS

It is most important to eat at regular hours and to establish regular times for evacuation, as this is a great aid to body rhythm.

Have You a Question?

Ash C. Houston Goudiss has disposal of readers of the all the facilities of his Imperial Kitchen Laboratory city. He will answer questions concerning nutrition, and their relation to health. You are also invited to in matters of personal health not necessary to write a you desire, for postage will receive the same attention. Address him at Street, New York City.

Guard carefully against eating, for this practice is a frequent cause of constipation. The digestive system, if worked, none of its functions are efficiently performed. The homemaker is responsible for safe food family against the faulty elimination. For in her power to plan will help normal and avoid the curse of constipation.

Italian Hemstitching for a Chair Set

THE chair set shown here is made of an even meshed cream linen, marked off in squares of Italian hemstitching. Tiny scrolls in outline stitch with two diamonds in satin stitch are embroidered in all the outside corners. The scroll motif is shown at lower left. The tassels are made by raveling strips of the material and then rolling them.

The chair back piece measures 15 by 10 inches finished, and the chair arm pieces 7½ by 7½ inches. Allow ¾-inch at all edges for the rolled hems. The hemstitched squares measure 2½ inches. Mark them in pencil. The method of hemstitching the rolled edges is shown here at A and B. Remember that a moist thumb always helps in rolling an edge evenly. Italian hemstitching is really just two rows worked together as shown at C and D. To prepare the rows, draw two threads, skip four and then draw two more.

Political Candidates Now Ready For June Election

FIFTEEN IN RACE FOR COUNTY OFFICES

Registration For Political Posts Close As Deadline Is Reached

Thirteen candidates filed nomination papers for Hancock county offices with Auditor Fred C. Missal, Saturday, the last day for filing for the primary election June 13.

Fred C. Missal, auditor; Roy L. McMillin, treasurer; Elmer Raw, clerk; Leslie M. Brower, sheriff; Christyna Callison, recorder; George E. Klipping, supervisor. Incumbents are candidates on the republican ticket, Mr. Klipping for Forest City for the term beginning in 1940.

Frank J. Schoun, farmer near Klemme, who served two terms and an unexpired term as supervisor, is a candidate on the republican ticket for the term beginning in 1940.

Ben F. Greimann of near Garrettsville, democratic incumbent, is a candidate for the term beginning in 1939.

Attorney Clark E. Lovrien of Klemme, formerly of Garner, is a candidate for county attorney on the republican ticket. W. D. Daly, republican incumbent serving his third term, is not a candidate.

Edmund J. Andregg, farmer near Britt, is the democratic candidate for supervisor for the term beginning in 1940.

Kenneth F. Boughton of Britt, incumbent, is a republican candidate for the office of coroner.

For representative, Oscar E. Johnson, democratic incumbent of Kanawha. Walter S. Pritchard of Klemme is republican candidate for post. Building of a county hospital at Britt will not be voted on at the primary election.

TOWNSHIP FARMER IS CANDIDATE FOR SUPERVISOR

Edmund J. Andregg, Erin township, this week announces in the press of the county that he is a candidate on the democrat ticket for the office of supervisor for the term beginning Jan. 1, 1940.

Mr. Andregg purchased a farm in Erin township eight years ago, where he now resides. He is a World War veteran and attended the University and Iowa State College. For the past four years he has acted as secretary of the Farm Program Committee. He has farmed ever since leaving the army and is a farmer in Kossuth until he moved to this county.

FARMERS UNION MEETING HELD IN LIBERTY TWP.

Tuesday evening, May 3, the monthly local of the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union held its regular monthly meeting in Liberty No. 7 school.

The Farmers' Washington Sermon letters were read and discussed. A letter from John E. Waters, from 1929 to 1933 taught power farming in soviet Russia, was read by Ruby Wacker.

At the close of the business meeting the "R" trio sang "Lassie Come Home" and "Prayer Perfect." A song, "It's Nobody's Business" was read by Emma Wacker.

A candidate usually stands for things but a voter always votes for everything.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I understand that small payments made under the AAA Act will be automatically increased. How large must a payment be before the increase does not effect it?

A. No increase will be made on any payment of $200 or over. Small payments are increased a certain percentage, according to a schedule laid down by the Administration. Any payment between $186 and $200 will be automatically increased to $200.

Q. If I am landlord on two farms and my payment on each of those farms is less than $200, will I receive the regular increase in payment for each farm?

A. Yes.

Q. If I am receiving a payment under the 1938 Conservation Program will I be eligible for a corn loan in 1938?

A. The only requirement to be eligible for a corn loan in 1938 on any farm is that the planted corn acreage on such farm be held within the acreage allotment for that farm.

Q. Will requirements of housing conditions for corn be more stringent in 1938 than in 1937 or will they remain the same?

A. The requirements for warehousing corn for a federal corn loan will be such that the government will be reasonably assured that the collateral will not be impaired due to improper housing conditions.

Q. What is the ruling concerning changes of ownership during the year under the 1938 Agricultural Conservation Program?

A. While the rules governing such cases have not been definitely written, it will be assumed that, regardless of the time the change and ownership takes place, the person entitled to a share of the crops on which payment is made will be the person entitled to payment under the 1938 program.

Q. Is there any payment made in 1938 for eradication of thistles?

A. No payment will be made under the 1938 program for the eradication of thistles; however, thistle patches can be summer fallowed and classified as non-depleting and help to get the non-depleting acreage required on the farm, provided a whole field is summer fallowed or the strip fallowed is across the end or side of the field and the line between the fallow and rest of the field is in a straight line.

Q. Will a cover crop be required on summer fallow in Iowa?

A. No cover crop will be required on summer fallow in Iowa to classify it as non-depleting. The state committee feels that the requirement of a cover crop on summer fallow will shorten the time during which a farmer can cultivate during which a farmer can cultivate no vate noxious weeds. Therefore, no cover crop will be required but county committees must see that such patches of summer fallow are cultivated sufficiently to prevent the growth of thistles or other noxious weeds.

Q. If I am given a corn acreage allotment of 40 acres must I plant 40 acres of corn?

A. You must plant at least 80 per cent of this 40 acres or 32 acres. If you fail to do so your corn payment will be based on 125 percent of the acreage of corn which you

Ladies Of Community Invited To Attend Free Cooking School

LEWIS RADIO SHOP WILL HOLD COOKING SCHOOL NEXT THURS.

Miss Beatrice McCartney Will Demonstrate Latest Methods

The Lewis Radio Shop will sponsor a cooking school to be held at the Klemme Methodist Church kitchen and dining room on Tuesday afternoon, May 17th, beginning at 2:00 o'clock. Mr. Lewis invites all of the ladies of Klemme and this community to attend.

Miss McCartney will demonstrate cooking with Shellane gas, a method that is available to both town and country kitchens. Mr. Lewis urges that no matter what kind of stove you use in your kitchen, to come to this demonstration as he says it is really a "school of instruction" in the newest methods of preparing meals.

Turn to the Lewis Radio adv. in this issue for further details.

INOCULATION OF SOYBEANS URGED BY COUNTY AGENT

Inoculation of soybeans before planting is a highly desirable practice in Hancock County because it insures bigger yields of soybeans as grain or hay and reduces the danger of nitrogen depletion, says County Agent T. C. Petersen.

Since the soybean is a legume, it can obtain free nitrogen from the air through nitrogen-fixing bacteria if they are present on the roots. But if these bacteria are absent—as they usually are—the soybean must obtain all its nitrogen from the soil.

To make sure that soybeans do not become a serious nitrogen-depleting crop, inoculation is advisable. In fact, Iowa State College agronomists term inoculation "good crop insurance" even on land where soybeans have been grown before.

The Iowa State College Agricultural Experiment Station has obtained marked increases in yield of soybeans from inoculation on acid soil. And the inoculation also increased the protein content of both seed and hay. Inoculation was even more effective on neutral soils.

Q. Do I have to plant enough acres of other soil-depleting crops to fill my general soil-depleting allotment?

A. No. Your general soil-depleting payment will not be decreased if you fail to plant any part of your general depleting acreage.

PHEASANT STOCKING PLANS ANNOUNCED

Instructions and plans for the care and release of pheasants hatched at the new state game bird hatchery were given to county conservation groups this week by the State Conservation Commission. The birds are being hatched by the state and allocated to organized groups for raising and release to the wild.

The instructions to cooperating groups explains that the number of pheasant chicks to be allocated to any one county will be dependent upon the number of counties expressing a willingness to cooperate with the Conservation Commission that are in need of seed stock.

Applications for birds must first be approved by the Conservation Officer for the district after he has inspected the equipment for raising the birds to determine if suitable. Brooders and pens must be supplied by cooperating groups. Groups will be advised three days in advance of shipment of the pheasant chicks in order that brooders may be heated and in readiness.

The chicks will be about two weeks old when delivered and cooperating groups will care for them until they are about twelve weeks of age.

Location of areas where a seed stock of pheasants is needed should be determined as early as possible, the instructions explain. If, for some reason the environment is not entirely suitable, an attempt should be made to remedy the conditions. The local Conservation Officer must approve all areas on which birds are to be released. He will also advise the group of any improvements to be made.

All birds are to be leg banded before being released. Bands are furnished by the Conservation Commission. The purpose of banding the birds is to obtain information concerning any migration which may occur after the birds are released.

The cooperating county organization is to make the necessary arrangements with the landholders to have the areas posted on which birds are to be released and closed to all hunting for a period of one year. The Commission explains that only through natural reproduction can a shootable surplus of pheasants be economically produced.

FIFTEEN SENIORS WILL RECEIVE DIPLOMAS THIS YEAR

Will Take Part In Many Activities During Remainder Of Year

Commencement week activities will be in full swing at Klemme High School, starting with the junior-senior banquet Friday evening of this week. Fifteen seniors will take part in the events of the final week leading up to the commencement night.

The juniors are working out a Japanese motif for the banquet. The gymnasium will be transformed into a Japanese garden and will be very real in appearance. The public will be welcome to look in at the gymnasium during the half-hour between 4:30 and 5:00 o'clock Friday afternoon. Seniors and faculty guests will come at 6:30.

Baccalaureate services will be held Sunday evening at the Reformed Church at eight o'clock. Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch will preach the baccalaureate sermon. Special music will be given by the high school girls' sextette.

Tuesday evening at the high school the Class of 1938 will present its class day exercises. The usual program will be given and will be supplemented by special numbers by individuals and groups.

Wednesday evening after school the seniors will entertain the juniors at a senior-junior picnic.

Commencement proper will be the evening of Thursday, May 19. Dr. Paul Grosshuesch, president of

DR. PAUL GROSSHUESCH

Mission House College at Plymouth, Wisconsin, will give the address. Dr. Grosshuesch is a brother to Klemme's Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch.

The school year will officially come to an end Friday, May 20, with the community picnic. School board members and their wives are making plans now for this event. They are anxious to have the entire community take part.

Following is a list of the seniors who will be graduated this year: Avis M. Barz, Doris I. Barz, Novella I. Beier, Ruth C. Blickenderfer, Elaine M. Buntenschach, Eloise E. Etchen, Gladys E. Griffen, Ray A. Jorgenson, Jr., Verner E. Lau, Glenn V. Lewis, Juanita M. Pavey, Paul Herman Schuldt, R. Irene Spitler, Elmer O. Trampel and Raymond E. Wille.

Members of the high school faculty are W. Henry Galbreth, superintendent; Albert L. Kingery, principal; Martin K. Elstad; Florence Wallace and Margaret Brakel.

Members of the school board are H. F. Jost, president; Albert Barz, H. R. Gibbs, C. G. Waterman, and A. J. Kudje, secretary.

The Lord freezes the water but we are expected to cut our own ice.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG., WASHINGTON D. C.

Washington.—An inquiry comes from my old home town in Missouri, asking, in effect, Time G. O. P. what are the Republicans doing?

The letter, quite obviously from a follower of that old Democratic stalwart, former Sen. Jim Reed, explains that the writer would like to see Democratic party machinery back in the hands of Democrats, but it is complained that the Republicans have provided little opposition to the New Deal left-wingers. The further complaint is registered that many of the Democrats in congress have failed to set forth "cold facts" about New Deal spending.

I have paid very little attention to Republican party affairs for quite awhile for the simple reason that Republican partisans, either as a party or individually, have been doing nothing. They have a chance now to do something. Whether they will become really active, remains to be seen. They have been quarreling among themselves, snarling, fighting, letting petty jealousies keep their ranks split wide open.

But let's take a look at their picture now to see whether there is any real hope.

It will be recalled that during the fight against the Roosevelt plan to pack the Supreme court with six new justices, the Republicans kept very quiet. That is, they were quiet as far as surface indications go. Beneath the surface, they were busy helping the Democrats fight off that nation-wrecking scheme put forward by the New Dealers. I believe everyone regarded that as good political strategy. By refusing to make the Supreme court packing plan a partisan issue, the Republicans kept a lot of ammunition out of New Deal hands. That fight was led by regular Democrats like Senators Wheeler of Montana, Burke of Nebraska, Rep. Hattin Summers of Texas and others like them.

But the Supreme court battle was followed by a cleavage in the ranks of the dominant party in congress, and the Republicans failed to follow up their jobs as the opposition party. They failed to take advantage of many opportunities. In fact, nothing was done at all until the government reorganization bill was pushed onto the stage and President Roosevelt made that legislation an issue. It may be said that the Republicans did nothing of consequence in that fight, but they voted with the real Democrats at the finish. That was the vote that killed the reorganization bill. Theirs was the vote which, had it been taken under the British or French parliamentary system, would have forced resignation of "the government" because it showed lack of confidence in the executive.

And, now to the present. In the last few weeks, there have been signs that ought to be heartening to the rank and file of the Republican lists. They are, however, just signs, as far as any honest appraisal goes. The Republican national committee has selected Franklyn Waltman, a Washington newspaper correspondent, to take charge of and reorganize the party's publicity set-up. Mr. Waltman is a fine writer, one of Washington's best. He has spent some fifteen years as a political observer. He has courage and imagination; perhaps not as much imagination as Charles Michelson of the Democratic national committee, but he is young and vigorous.

This "sign" is significant because there has been no trained publicity man at Republican headquarters for the last three months, and the man who occupied the post before either was unable to do anything or was not allowed by his superiors or the factional strife within the party to accomplish anything. So, I say it is important to realize that the "voice" of the party is apparently going to be employed again.

Rep. Joe Martin of Massachusetts, who is chairman of the Republican congressional committee, and is assistant Republican leader of the house, has come forward with two or three blasts lately. Also, he has been able apparently to awaken some of the ninety-odd Republicans in the house of representatives to the fact that they constitute the opposition party. So they have been making some speeches in the attack on the New Deal spending program. Chairman John Hamilton of the national committee has been on the air a time or two and former Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas has attempted in a couple of speeches to recall that he was the party's 1936 presidential nominee. Former President Herbert Hoover came back from Europe and jumped onto much of the New Deal's vital theory in one of the best speeches he ever has made. A score or more "organization" meetings have been held in various parts of the country in the last month, and I understand that a flock more of them is scheduled.

But to go back to a previous statement: these are just signs. They can be made alive and real and effective, or they can be allowed to die of dry rot. It will be a couple of months more before anybody can tell, even though Representative Martin now is on record as saying the Republicans will win 76 additional seats in the house this fall.

The answer to the Republican problem lies, I believe, in the answer to one question: can the Republican factions get together? That is to say, will it be possible for the so-called "New York crowd" and the so-called "Middle West crowd" to arrange a common ground upon which all can stand? And if they succeed in that, will they then be able to persuade numerous lone wolves and bellowing calves to come into the corral for united action?

In this latter category, one will find oodles of individuals who claim leadership of followings, great or small. One will see Senator Vandenberg of Michigan trying to dodge affiliations of any kind that may hinder his hurdle race—because Mr. Vandenberg is building for the Republican nomination whether he is willing to admit it now or not. Then, there are such others as Rep. Hamilton Fish of New York who was a great university football player. I suppose Mr. Fish knows his congressional district and knows how to play politics there, but it seems to me that he ought to be of great aid and comfort to the New Dealers.

It is obvious, therefore, that while the dominant party is split widely between New Dealers and regular Democrats, the Republicans have some harmonizing ahead of them, too. They will get somewhere or not, just as they decide to subordinate petty jealousies and efforts to "keep control" to the party necessities in the coming congressional elections. Some observers in Washington lately have insisted to me that Republicans will gain in the house and senate this year despite, and not because of, party organization. Their conclusion is that Mr. Roosevelt's personal popularity has declined tremendously, and if that has happened obviously, the strength of the New Deal has slipped off onto very thin political ice.

The national capital has been treated lately to a lifesized uproar over the abuse of the franking privilege. The franking privilege is accorded all members of congress and officials so that they are not required to pay postage out of one pocket and collect it back for the other. I have no doubt, nor does anyone else who is familiar with the practice, that the franking privilege has been frequently abused. It remained for Horace Russell, general counsel for the Home Owners' Loan corporation, to get caught at it, however, and Mr. Russell, therefore, is the goat about which the storm has centered. He has resigned his job, but it appears that he may be stuck with a postage bill of about $280.

Mr. Russell was accused on the floor of the house by Representative Church of Illinois of having sent out "millions" of letters advising attorneys for the Home Owners' Loan corporation in the various cities that Judge O. B. Taylor was resigning as associate general counsel and was opening private offices in Washington for the practice of law. The letters, which were shown later to number about ten thousand, highly praised Judge Taylor and solicited business for him. Disclosure of the act in the house brought about Mr. Russell's prompt retirement and apologies, but the Post Office department and the Department of Justice had to look into the matter. Hence, the likelihood that there will be a demand for payment of the postage and that there will be no further prosecution.

The incident created a stir and more will be heard from it probably, because there can be no doubt but that the free mail privilege has been abused viciously.

But it may be of interest to know that there have been few if any convictions for violation of the free mail privilege. Post Office department officials were unable to recall any prosecutions, although there had been some indictments, since the present arrangement went into effect in 1887.

The incident involving Messrs. Taylor and Russell calls attention to the tremendous amount of mail that is carried free of postage. Last year, according to postal records, 1,107,252,468 pieces of mail were carried under free provisions. Of these 669,352,068 came from members of the house and senate. If postage had been paid on all of the mail, the amount would have been $33,713,305. Postage on the congressional mail was estimated at something in excess of $20,000,000—which indicates how much less campaigning costs after a politician is once elected to house or senate.

Busiest P. O.—Busiest Postmistress

Here is the modest little post office in Kitty Hawk, N. C., which has jumped into national prominence as the result of the issuance of the new airmail stamp to commemorate the twentieth anniversary of airmail. Above, also, is Mrs. E. W. Baum, whose hands will be full during Air Mail week, ending May 22. Philatelists from all over the world are sending mail to be stamped here with the special cachet for Air Mail week. Kitty Hawk was the site from which the Wright brothers made the first airplane flight.

"Dizzy" Is Happy as Cub

"Dizzy" Dean, right, former star pitcher of the St. Louis Cardinals and now a member of the Cubs, is seen with "Gabby" Hartnett, star catcher. Dean's transfer to Chicago has sent the Cubs' pennant stock soaring.

"MINE," SAYS JACKIE

Jackie Coogan, former child star, is shown at hearing with $500,000 check as part payment for his appearance in four pictures when he was a youngster. The check from old Metro studios was introduced as evidence in Jackie's suit for an accounting of his earnings. Coogan asked for an accounting from his mother, Mrs. Lillian Coogan Bernstein, and his stepfather, Arthur Bernstein.

THEY'RE CALLED CRIMINALS

Juvenile Delinquency Is 'Public' Delinquency, Claim Child Psychologists; Parents and Authorities Held Responsible

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

IT HAPPENED in a midwestern community.

Jim was a farm youth who wanted good clothes, candy and cigarettes. His position in life made such luxuries impossible but Jim found a way. Occasionally he'd take (not steal) a chicken from his mother's flock, selling it to the village meat dealer.

Jim began having the luxuries he desired. His dad bought him an old car and Jim instantly became a hero among the community's younger crowd. But one luxury led to another and eventually Jim was taking (not stealing) more chickens. When his mother's supply began diminishing Jim used to take chickens from nearby farmers.

Eventually the meat dealer became suspicious and had Jim arrested. At seventeen, this boy who wanted nothing more than new luxuries was sent to the reform school for stealing chickens. Who knows what may happen when Jim is freed?

More pertinent still, perhaps, is the question of who is to blame. The neighbors pity Jim's parents and moralize about his deplorable delinquency. Perhaps it was just unfortunate circumstance; maybe no one is to blame.

In crowded Boston the investigator will stumble on a somewhat similar problem. That staid old Massachusetts city is battling the menace of young thieves, boys and girls who steal automobiles for break-neck midnight rides in a heedless and puzzling search for thrills. The cars are stolen to sell but are usually found abandoned or wrecked when the joy riders have finished with them. What causes this peculiar mental "kink" in modern adolescents?

But the most fascinating—probably, fundamental—cause of juvenile delinquency is the boy "gang," a group of neighborhood youngsters who are forces for well-meant companionship and often end up behind prison bars. More than one child psychiatrist, seeking the basic cause of child crime, has placed his finger on the old wooden shack which sits unnoticed on a vacant lot, a "hangout" for boys who have no other source of recreation.

Kept Diary of Loot.

One psychiatrist, living in an east city, purposely frequented an area where gangs flourished. His diary makes interesting reading; "First of all, I had to gain the confidence by taking part in their every-day activities. After that was merely a matter of observation. There were two 'smart' boys in this particular gang who obtained their start from stealing. They went to a store and while Joe attracted the manager's attention, Tom 'lifted' a green record book. This was his diary, after a fashion, in which was kept a complete record of the gang's criminal activities.

A few months later I succeeded in getting possession of that diary by telling Tom about a survey I intended to make. An interview was arranged at a downtown home where the boy was made to feel his importance by the gift of a cigar. He handed over the diary. As I tell you, it was rich with material on juvenile delinquency.

But in the mind of J. Edgar Hoover, director of the federal bureau of investigation, there's another answer. Hoover, who may some day have to cope with adult criminals who are today child criminals, calls this public delinquency!

What's the Cause?

"Our youthful criminals of today," says Mr. Hoover, "come from broken homes by death or divorce—homes where discipline was lacking. An unknown factor—something where there was little or no opportunity to see anything but the wrong side of life—or from homes where parents, by their own laziness, lack of common sense, disregard for law, or bad example, care-he was misused at home and had to look elsewhere for recreation. What many parents forget, say the specialists, is that the physical fact of fatherhood or motherhood does not endow a man or woman with supernatural qualities. The art of parenthood has to be learned the same as anything else.

Listen to Dr. Paul Popenoe, noted counselor on family relations who feels proper parental treatment will dissuade potential child criminals:

"The first thing for a parent to do is to keep the emotions of anger and severity on cold storage. A surgeon can't give away his emotions when he has a serious operation to perform, and a parent can't go blind with feeling when he has a problem to deal with in relation to his children.

"Parents need patience in dealing with their youngsters. They can't treat their children as something to be kicked about or locked up in the closet. They are human beings. When they misbehave, their action must be considered as a symptom, the same as a fever or an ache, and not a cause. If parents go into causes, they very likely will find themselves to blame."

Will Delinquency Decrease?

The problem of juvenile delinquency is especially pertinent right now because soon thousands of school children will be released for the annual vacation, many of them left to their own ingenuity to find summer recreation. But each year this problem becomes less pressing, because more communities are instituting comprehensive playground programs for children of all ages. Designed to keep youngsters busy all day, these activities encourage healthy bodies, clear heads and—at night—drowsy eyes that welcome sleep.

Today's 'teen age generation is a problem because public responsibility for juvenile delinquency was not recognized until a few years ago. Who can tell but that tomorrow's youngsters, aided by the healthy recreation their communities now sponsor, will forego crime for a nobler life?

It's possible, so long as we remember the trouble isn't juvenile delinquency, but public delinquency!

Lesson for May 15

TESTING DISCIPLESHIP BY SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:17-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come . . . and follow me—Mark 10:21.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Young Man Jesus Loved
JUNIOR TOPIC—What a Rich Man Needed
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Proving Our Loyalty to Christ by Service
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Marks of Discipleship.

"The almighty dollar"—how triumphantly it rules in the affairs of nations and of the men who make up nations. The world's measure of success is how much one can "make," and "no questions asked" as to how one made it, if he but avoid the legal pitfalls that may land him in jail. Even that is no longer a disgrace, for men who have defrauded others serve a term in jail to "pay their debt to society," and then return without shame to enjoy the use of their ill-gotten gains. Skill in the arts and sciences is rated according to its financial value. Brains and beauty are commodities of the market place. Liquor is permitted to destroy our people because it provides a profit.

The minds of men and women of decency and intelligence revolt at the whole situation. Let us encourage them as we improve the opportunity today to present God's moral and spiritual standards.

I. Self Before God (vv. 17-22).

The rich young ruler had many advantages and virtues. He was young, life was before him, vivid was his imagination, strong was his body. He was educated, and developed intelligence is an honor to any man. He had position, which can always be used for good. He had money, which when rightly gained and used, is a powerful and honorable possession. Above all, he had the priceless jewel of good character. Notice that he had kept the commandments, that he came before the Lord in humility seeking truth, and that Jesus "loved him" (v. 21).

Almost any father would be proud to own this young man as a son. Many churches would welcome him to membership and even to leadership. Jesus dealt with him honestly, however, and went to the root of his difficulty which was that he loved himself and his possessions more than he loved God. Therefore he must give them up before he could really follow Jesus. Sad indeed was his refusal. He came running (v. 17), but he went away sorrowful (v. 22).

What stands between you and a full surrender to Christ? Face it honestly. Be thankful if your pastor or a friend frankly points it out. Shun those who would "pat you on the back" and assure you that all is well. A cancer will kill unless it is cut out. The surgeon's knife may hurt, but it is an instrument of good.

Note that the statement of Jesus in verse 18 is not a denial of His deity, but a definite claim that He is God. He says in effect, "If you call me good you must recognize that I am God."

II. God Before Self (vv. 21-27).

The disciples, who evidently shared the common opinion that money could do almost anything, were surprised to hear that riches were really a hindrance to spirituality, because (v. 24) of the tendency of men to trust in their wealth and forget their need of God.

Jesus does not leave the rich man without hope, for he goes on to say that what is impossible for men and even for the rich man himself is entirely possible with God.

Two things need emphasis in this connection. First, let those of us who have little of this world's goods be thankful that we have, at least, been delivered from this temptation. It may well be an expression of God's love and grace toward us. Second, let us thank God for every man of wealth who has given himself and what he has into God's hands.

III. The Last Before the First (vv. 28-31).

The ways of God are confusing and humbling to the flesh. The way up in spiritual things is to go down (Mark 9:35). Those who are first in the eyes of men are often last in God's sight. Others whom men count as least stand highest in God's sight because they are faithful and true to Him. The world looks at the missionary of the cross and says, "He has sacrificed everything," and knows nothing of the "hundredfold" reward even in this life, "and in the world to come, eternal life" (v. 30).

Light-Hearted Fashions

THE approach of summer makes us all long to get into bright, easy, carefree clothes, even if we're planning to vacation at home, with occasional weekends at the lake or seashore. These two patterns bring you styles that chief print for the topper—any sturdy cotton. Here's a holiday outfit you'll thoroughly enjoy.

The Adorable Dirndl.

Nothing is more popular, because nothing is more becoming to slim young figures. It's such a gay, easy-to-wear fashion, and the square neckline is flattering. For a dirndl, choose something in a lively print—linen, chintz and percale are best. Be sure the colors are as complimentary to your skin as that fitted, shirred waistline is to your figure!

The Patterns.

1332 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39-inch material for the bolero and slacks; 3/4 yard for the topper.

1480 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 35-inch material, plus 3/4 yards of braid for trimming and 1 1/2 yards ribbon for belt.

Spring-Summer Pattern Book.

Send 15 cents for the Barbara Bell Spring and Summer Pattern Book which is now ready. It contains 109 attractive, practical and becoming designs. The Barbara Bell patterns are well planned, accurately cut and easy to follow. Each pattern includes a sew-chart which enables even a beginner to cut and make her own clothes.

Rapid Growth

AROUND THE HOUSE

Butter the Raisins.—A good way to keep raisins from going to the bottom of a cake is to roll them in butter before placing them in the batter.

Save Pickling Sirup.—Sirup left from pickled or spiced fruits makes a delicious flavoring for roast meats.

Hanging New Curtains.—Baste a tuck in new curtains under the top hem where it will not show, then if the curtains shrink when first laundered it will be easy to let out the extra length.

Washing a Raincoat.—Soap should never be used when washing a raincoat. Instead, use a solution of one pound of alum to three gallons of water.

Odors Eliminated.—Left-over vegetables having a strong smell, such as cabbage, onions, cauliflower, etc., should be put into a glass jar and the top screwed on tightly before placing in the refrigerator. Otherwise the whole ice box will take up the unpleasant odor.

Icing Will Not Run.—If you will dust your cakes with cornstarch before icing, the icing will not tend to run.

Keeping Sliced Bananas.—You can keep ripe bananas from turning dark after slicing if you cover them with any fruit juice or sprinkle them with lemon juice.

Grind Cheese.—When using cheese for macaroni, potatoes, etc., do not grate it. Put it through the fine cutter of your meat chopper and you will not have any small pieces left over.

Grease the Paper.—Grease both the pan and paper when lining cake pans.

Prevents Smoke.—To avoid smoke when making griddle cakes, use a salt bag instead of fat to prevent them from sticking. Merely fill a small, clean cloth bag with salt and rub it over the hot griddle each time fresh batter is put on.

Wash Before Using.

Laundry new linens before you use them. As snowy white as your new table cloth or sheets may look, they are bound to be affected by handling of prospective buyers and sales clerks, or by the dusty air in the store. You will be surprised to see the amount of dirt that appears in the water when you wash these new articles for the first time.

SEEDS, SOIL and CLIMATE!

THE soil and climate of this part of the country are an open book to the seed experts who breed and select pedigreed Ferry's Seeds. In their experimental gardens, they have perfected seed varieties that are at their best under these conditions.

You'll find these seed varieties in the familiar red-and-silver Ferry's Seeds store display. The unique Ferry-Morse Seed-Breeding Institute has spent years to bring them to perfection.

The Service At The Grave ...
It seems to us sometimes, that the climax of the entire funeral service, is that solemn moment, when the Pastor reads the burial service at the grave. It is here, at the grave side, that the family take final leave of their loved one and go home alone to carry on as best they can.
For this reason we have, from time to time, added refinement which should make the grave side service more beautiful. years ago we put in the best lowering device obtainable, and with a beautiful grass cover for the mound, was a great improvement over the strap lowering method.
And now, we have added a "Chapel Tent" to our equipment. The picture above shows how it is used at the grave. There are kinds of Cemetery Tents, and we looked around and investigated for about two years before buying. We feel sure that we purchased the best tent on the market today. The best in quality and the best in point of convenient handling.
We hope that use of this tent will add just a little to the comfort of those who attend final rites at the grave.

Radium Atoms Tell Age of Meteorites That Fall on Earth

Cambridge, Mass.—Exploding atoms of radium, giving off helium, lead and energy, now tell scientists the ages of many meteorites which wandered into the earth's gravitational field, later crashing to earth with fiery brilliance.

Some of them, according to figures recently published by Dr. William D. Urry, Massachusetts Institute of Technology physical chemist, who has been analyzing rocks for many years to determine their ages, are less than 100,000,000 years old, while others are as much as 2,800,000,000 years old—about as old as the solar system.

Doctor Urry's analyses, painstakingly made from samples of the meteorite, tell the age of its solidification, and not the time when it fell. Thus, some of these wanderers from space were molten during the age of dinosaurs on earth, while others solidified just as the solar system was being formed.

"Chips From Creation."

The oldest meteorites, according to Doctor Urry's figures, could truly be "chips from creation," left over from the great mass of material pulled from the sun when the planets were formed. Others, unless they stayed melted for more than two billion years in the bitter cold of space, could not be left-overs. They must have been formed some other way.

Until recently, it was believed that meteorites were remains of a small planet, or group of planets, whose orbits were beyond Mars. This planet, on breaking up, created the meteorites. Now, with the ages of the meteorites shown to be different, the theory of a disrupted planet may need to be revised.

Many of the stony meteorites show evidence of having been broken and recombined, while others have undergone other alterations just as a rock on earth might in the course of its history. All of the rocks, however, are of the primary type—they were melted once, but none of them resemble earthly sediments, such as sandstone or shale. The iron meteorites resemble the earth's interior as it has been described by geophysicists, whose instruments tell them facts about places they will never see.

Ruins of Van May Tell History of Old Kingdom

Providence, R. I. — American archeologists have set out for Turkey in hope that an ancient city called Van will yield important secrets of history.

Ruins they plan to excavate once formed a capital and fortress of a kingdom that rose and fell between about 840 B. C. and 600 B. C. Buried records, it is believed, will explain how the kingdom dealt with its formidable neighbors, before Scythian armies destroyed the capital.

The joint expedition to Van is undertaken by Brown university and the University of Pennsylvania, with such well-known archeologists in charge as Prof. Robert P. Casey of Brown, Prof. Kirsopp Lake, retired professor of Biblical literature at Harvard, and Dr. Horace Jayne of the University museum, University of Pennsylvania. Three summers of excavation are planned.

Professor Casey believes that, if enough cuneiform writings can be unearthed at Van, the kingdom's history can be traced, and this will add to understanding of the Biblical books of Genesis and Kings.

Oil Recovery Increased by Remote Control Cannon

Schenectady, N. Y.—Fifteen gun barrels, firing .30 caliber bullets through an oil well casing hundreds of feet below the surface, promise to increase oil production in many fields where several rock strata bear oil. During drilling, each oil stratum encountered is recorded on the well log. Later, when the well is cased to the bottom, the cannon is lowered to the level of each oil stratum, and fired, punching holes in the casing to let in the oil from that bed.

Controlled electrically from the well head, this cannon may be lowered as much as two miles below the surface, and fired when it is opposite any desired rock bed. Accurate revolution counters tell the operators exactly how far below the surface the cannon is at any time.

Surplus Crop Uses to Be Studied in Four Laboratories

Washington.—New ways to dispose of surplus crop production, especially through industrial uses of farm and forest products, are to be sought in four new laboratories, one each in four regions of the country, for which provision is made in the recently enacted agricultural bill. A committee of the United States Department of Agriculture has been studying the provisions of the act, endeavoring to select the best locations for the research centers, and outlining lines of investigation that most need to be undertaken.

Under the terms of the act, $4,000,000 is authorized for research and development devoted primarily to those farm commodities in which there are regular or seasonal surpluses, and their products and by-products. One-fourth of this sum is to be allocated to each of four laboratories.

While the wording of the bill provides merely that one laboratory shall be located in each of the four principal agricultural regions of the country, it is considered probable that the states will be blocked out into groups as northeast, south, midwest, and west.

Each Region Has Its Problems.

Each of these general regions has its own particular group of crop-surplus problems awaiting solution. Thus, northeast will present dairy products and potatoes; south will have cotton and tobacco; midwest will bring up corn and wheat, and west will have to deal with citrus fruits and vegetables.

The foregoing of course is only a skeleton list. Each section will have a considerable number of jobs for its laboratory. In the South, for example, cotton and tobacco are joined by sweet potatoes, sugar plants, citrus fruits, peaches and naval stores.

Problems to be tackled by the government scientists will not be solely a search for ways to deal with surpluses already regularly produced. Surpluses may be eliminated by the substitution of other desirable crops suitable for production in the several regions.

Thus, to take the South again as an example, it is thought worth while to consider the possibility of the introduction and commercial utilization of such things as the new tung-oil trees, new kinds of starch and fiber plants, and new plants for the production of tannin. Noteworthy among the latter is a kind of dock with dahlia-like roots which contain as much as 30 per cent of tannin.

You Are the Part Owner of Herd of 10,000 Elk

Baltimore.—You and you, Mr. and Mrs. United States Citizen, are part owners of a herd of nearly 10,000 elk, that live in the northern part of Yellowstone national park. Your hired men, the rangers, count them for you once a year, working on skis and snowshoes, often battling blizzards.

At the third annual North American Wildlife conference here, Victor H. Cahalane of the United States national park service, told of the 1937 elk census. Fifteen groups of rangers, working in twos and threes, as nearly as possible at the same time, counted all the elk they could find. Severe weather interfered, but it is felt that the total count of 8,318 does not represent much duplication. However, because of the probability that many were missed, hiding in small bands in thickets, the count was estimated as only 90 per cent complete. The full estimated total comes to 9,673 head of elk.

There is also a southern herd on the other side of the park and in nearby territory, that is about the same size as the northern herd, or perhaps even larger.

Ancient Greek Acropolis Found Near Marseilles

Paris.—Foundations of a Greek acropolis have been discovered near Marseilles by Henri Roland, archeologist, of Saint-Remy.

The acropolis consists of a fort, apparently built by the Greeks who founded Massila, later Marseilles. The fort would have served to defend the plateau from invasion, and to cut off passage towards the north.

Greek coins from the period between the Sixth century B. C., to the Christian era have been unearthed at the ancient fort, and also many pieces of broken pottery.

Archeologists attach special interest to the discoveries, since ruins of the time of Greek influence in southern France are rare.

Star Dust

- ★ The Practical Pig
- ★ She'd Fly to Mars
- ★ Back to the Land

By Virginia Vale

WALT DISNEY has learned that "The Three Little Pigs" have never lost their popularity; that picture is the most popular short that he's ever made. So he very sensibly has decided to make a sequel. It will be "The Practical Pig" and not only will the three original pigs appear in it, but there will be three new characters, the three little wolfs.

The success of "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" has encouraged him in his plan to continue with a fairy tale series; before long we'll be seeing "The Brave Little Tailor, or Seven at One Blow," in which he will star Mickey and Minnie Mouse.

It begins to look as if Disney is superstitious about the numbers three and seven, doesn't it?

Merle Oberon was awfully glad to get home—and home, to her, means the United States. After spending more than a year in England, making pictures, she went to the Riviera for a vacation, and the sunshine and swimming made her homesick for Malibu beach; that's how she found out that neither Tasmania, where she was born, nor England, where she grew up, any longer mean home to her. You'll see her next in "Graustark," with Gary Cooper and Sigurd Gurie.

She's awfully glad that Samuel Goldwyn did something about changing her from an exotic looking siren to a normal girl; seems she didn't care for the type of beauty that was wished on her when she first came to this country to make pictures, any more than Myrna Loy cared about playing Oriental vamps just because her eyes were set on the bias.

If Joan Crawford decided that she wanted to fly to Mars she'd probably succeed. Time after time she has set her heart on doing a thing, and then worked determinedly until she accomplished it. Now it's singing that keeps her busy when she is not acting before the screen; she wants to sing in opera, so probably she will. Never has anyone had more determination than that girl possesses! She went to New York recently, and her admirers promptly gathered about the carriage entrance of her hotel. They proved, when she last visited New York, that they were as determined as she. Morning, noon and night some of them were there, and she, unlike some movie stars, admitted that she was delighted. Furthermore, she let them know it.

Columbia university undergraduates have acquired the habit of voting for Madeleine Carroll in a poll that is held each spring. The students vote for the girl who would be "the most desirable companion on a desert island," and she is the winner for 1937 and 1938. Their reasons—her ability to speak French, her blue eyes, blonde hair, classic profile and attractive figure.

Paul Whiteman and his wife, Margaret Livingston, have been looking for a country home for what seems to them an endless time. They finally found what they wanted—147 acres in New Jersey, on the Delaware river, not far from the farm that Sylvia Sidney recently bought. Somehow they escaped the screen and radio stars' invasion of Bucks County, Pa., which has reached such proportions that most people think Bucks is the only county in Pennsylvania.

Quick Embroidery for a Luncheon Set

HERE an embroidered border is plainly shown. No pattern is necessary. Book offered here-with contains other interesting borders of this type. Space your stitches just as they are here. The embroidery should be done in a light and a dark color. Use all strands of six-strand mercerized embroidery thread. Color suggestions are—dark and lighter blue thread on white material—dark green and light yellow on light green material—black and bright blue on pale yellow—deep rose and brown on pale pink.

Baste ½-inch deep hems around both mats and napkins. Working from right side with double thread, make two rows of running stitches in the dark color, as at A, catching through the hem. Thread a blunt tapestry needle with the light thread and weave through the running stitches keeping needle pointed to the left as at B. Next, weave back again, as at C, still pointing the needle to the left.

Readers who have received their copy of Mrs. Spears' book on Sewing, for the Home Decorator, will be pleased to know that Book No. 2 is now ready. Ninety embroidery stitches; fabric repairing; also table settings; gifts; and many things to make for yourself and the children. If you like handwork you will be pleased with this unique book of directions for every article illustrated. Postpaid upon receipt of 25 cents (coin preferred). WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses

FOOD PRESERVATION and Explains How to Protect Your Family Against the DANGERS of TAINTED FOOD

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York.

A DISTINGUISHED nutritional scientist once remarked that it is a small favor to keep people alive on a poorly chosen diet. For with the wrong food, they may not get one-fifth of their potential efficiency into their lives; they will drag themselves through miserable days, never knowing the joys of physical fitness nor enjoying the abundant health that comes from a perfect balance of nutriment.

The Perfect Diet May Not Be Safe to Eat

But even the homemaker who plans an ideal diet may be undermining the health of her family by feeding them spoiled or tainted food which carries the deadly germs of disease.

We frequently hear stories of death or serious illness caused by food contamination. And it is significant that the improper care of food in the home is most often responsible. One physician has gone so far as to state that there is no estimating the number of persons who, while not sick in bed, feel "rather poorly," "not strong," or "kind of run down" because improperly preserved food gives them insufficient nourishment.

Homemaker's Responsibility For Food Sanitation

An enormous amount of time and money is expended to put foodstuffs in your kitchen in a fresh, palatable and safe form. Laws govern the manufacture, transportation and merchandising of every food product and an elaborate system is maintained for the inspection of meat. But all this care can be undone if food is not adequately refrigerated in the home.

From the moment that meats, fruits, vegetables and groceries reach your kitchen, the responsibility is yours.

Causes of Food Spoilage

Spoilage in food is due to the ravages of a vast army of micro-organisms which cause it to sour, decay or putrefy, depending upon the nature of the food.

There are three classes of micro-organisms which develop in food—bacteria, molds and yeasts. All three are notable for their minute size, rapid growth and wide distribution.

Not all micro-organisms are the enemies of man; some are useful in the preparation of foods such as cheese, sauerkraut and bread. These need not concern the homemaker. But the harmful bacteria will flourish wherever conditions are favorable to their growth.

There are two important factors governing food preservation. One is the maintenance of a constant temperature of from 40 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit—under no circumstances should food be stored at a temperature higher than 50 degrees, or bacteria will multiply so rapidly as to make it unsafe to eat. The other is to maintain the proper degree of moisture in the air—neither too much, which encourages the growth of micro-organisms, nor too little, which dehydrates fruits and vegetables.

Appearance of Food May Be Deceptive

The great danger of food that is improperly stored is that it may become spoiled without advertising that fact. Appearance is seldom a reliable guide and unless your refrigerator is efficient, food may become unfit for consumption before spoilage can be noted by sight, taste or smell.

All types of protein foods harbor bacteria which multiply very rapidly at temperatures higher than 50 degrees.

Safeguard Children's Milk

Milk is the most perishable of all foods, because it is an ideal medium for bacterial growth. If this master food is to be kept safe for children, it must be stored at a temperature not higher than 45 degrees.

Careful studies show that there is very little increase in bacteria when milk is held for as long as 48 hours at a temperature of 40 degrees. But when the temperature was allowed to rise to 50 degrees, almost 30 times as many bacteria developed.

Foods That Spoil Easily

The rapid multiplication of bacteria also occurs in other foods having a high protein content, including meat, meat broths, fish, gelatin, custards, creamed foods, peas and beans.

Once food has begun to deteriorate, it must be discarded or it may endanger health. Cooking will not make spoiled foods fit for consumption.

How to Prevent Mold

Molds are another form of spoilage that the homemaker must constantly battle. Mold will grow on almost any substance, but is particularly likely to occur on acid foods, as lemons, oranges, tomatoes and berries; on neutral foods, such as bread and meat; on sweets, notably jellies and preserves, and on salty foods, including ham or bacon.

Molds may develop quickly or slowly, depending upon the temperature and degree of moisture. They thrive under the influence of warmth and moisture and may remain invisible to the naked eye for as long as 36 hours.

To the bacteriologist, these colors have different meanings. To the homemaker, they all tell the same story—that through improper storage food has lost its appetite appeal and palatability.

Mold growths may be destroyed by boiling temperatures. They may be retarded by keeping food in the cold, dry circulating air provided by an efficient refrigerator.

A good refrigerator is the best investment a family can make. It enables you to take advantage of bargain prices to buy food in quantity. And it safeguards health by preventing contaminated food from finding its way to your table.

An efficient refrigerator also preserves the flavor and texture

Have You a Question? Ask C. Houston Goudiss

C. Houston Goudiss has put at the disposal of readers of this newspaper all the facilities of his famous Experimental Kitchen Laboratory in New York City. He will gladly answer questions concerning foods, diet, nutrition, and their relation to health. You are also invited to consult him in matters of personal hygiene. It's not necessary to write a letter unless you desire, for postcard inquiries will receive the same careful attention. Address him at 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

Questions Answered

E. W.—It's a fallacy to assume that brown sugar is "more nutritious and healthful" than granulated sugar. It is true that brown sugar contains traces of mineral elements, while white sugar contains practically none. But the amounts are variable and never significant. Regardless of color, sugars make their sole contribution to the diet through their carbohydrate content. The caloric value of white sugar is a trifle higher than that of brown, the difference amounting to 91 calories per pound.

Mr. B. M. G.—Yes, cooking vegetables leads to a reduction of their energy values, as well as mineral salts. In general, there is a reduction of from one-third to one-half of the carbohydrate after cooking in water. Frequent reheating cannot be recommended as thrice-boiled vegetables contain little available carbohydrate, and the greater part of their minerals and flavor is also lost.

Mrs. S. T.—When thoroughly chewed and given a proper place in the diet, cheese is usually well digested. Experiments performed by the United States Department of Agriculture demonstrated that an average of 95 per cent of the protein and over 95 per cent of the fat of cheese were digested and absorbed.

Final Rites Held Today For Pioneer Businessman

FRANK GRUETZMACHER DIED AT HIS HOME
HERE MONDAY MORNING

Has Been In Business Longer Than Any Other Klemme Man

Frank Gruetzmacher, pioneer businessman of Klemme, died at his home here Monday morning after an illness extending over several months.

Mr. Gruetzmacher had been in business continuously longer than any other Klemme resident. He was a pioneer in the business of Klemme and took an active interest in the welfare of the town during the many past years.

Funeral services were held this Wednesday afternoon at the Methodist Church, conducted by Dr. Wm. Zabilka. Burial was made in the family lot at the Klemme Cemetery. Pall bearers were E. H. Pavey, Erick Josten, Otto Pringnitz, E. J. Arnold, E. J. Schneider and Tom Nelson.

Obituary

Franklin Benjamin Gruetzmacher was born November 4th, 1867, on a farm near Columbus, Wisconsin, the youngest of a family of six sons born to his parents, Christopher Gruetzmacher and wife. Here on the farm he spent his boyhood years and attended the rural schools.

At the age of 23 years he moved to Liberty township, Hancock county, Iowa, where he farmed for two years. Then he moved to the town of Klemme where he opened up a shoe store and harness shop, which he operated until the time of his death, a period of 46 years. Every business place in Klemme has changed hands or started new since his coming.

Mr. Gruetzmacher was a public spirited man and was always a booster for the town. He helped plan and build our water works system, sewer system, park, churches, school and our pavement. He was never too busy to give of his time for the good of the community. He was mayor of Klemme for many terms, and has been Justice of the Peace almost from the beginning of the Town. He was a member of the Methodist Church and for half a century was a member of its official board.

In 1893, Frank Gruetzmacher and Elizabeth Stille were married and commenced housekeeping in Klemme. To this union four children were born. Two died in infancy and two survive.

Mr. Gruetzmacher was always in good health, until a few years ago, when it was discovered that he had cancer of the lung. The end came Monday morning, May 16th.

He reached the age of 70 years, 6 months and 12 days.

He leaves besides his wife: Two children; Harold Gruetzmacher, Carroll, Iowa, Glenna Gruetzmacher.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. Is speltz considered a soil-depleting crop under the 1938 program?

A. Speltz is considered a soil depleting crop under the 1938 program when it is used as grain or hay. It is non-depleting when used as a nurse crop, cover crop not maturing as grain, a green manure crop or pasture.

Q. Are payments for soil-building practices limited to the soil building goal?

A. Yes. The soil-building payments made under the 1938 program will be limited to the soil building goal established for any farm.

Q. How is rye, spring seeding, classified when it is used for pasture?

A. It is non-depleting, if it is sufficiently pastured to prevent grain formation.

Q. When can rye, fall seeding, be classified as non-depleting?

A. Rye, fall seeding, can be classified as non-depleting when it is used as a green manure crop or pastured before May 1, 1938, and thereafter to prevent grain formation, or tilled before May 1, 1932, in preparation for another crop, or a use other than the harvesting of the acreage of such crop for grain or hay.

Q. Would cane used for silage count in the corn allotment?

A. All sweet sorghums used for silage will be classified as soil-depleting but will not be included in the corn acreage allotment.

Q. How are the soil-building goals set?

A. The soil-building goal for any farm will be the number of units of soil building practices equal to two-thirds of the number of dollars computed for the farm as follows: (1) 50 cents per acre of cropland in the farm in excess of the total soil-depleting acreage allotment set for the farm; (2) $1.50 per acre of the average acreage of land on which commercial vegetables were grown on the farm in 1936 and 1937; or (3) $2.00 per acre of commercial orchards on the farm Jan. 1, 1938; (4) 2 cents per acre of non-crop open pasture land on the farm plus $1.00 for each animal unit of grazing capacity of such pasture.

Q. If my payment for general soil-depleting acreage allotment is figured at $1.25 per acre, what would the deduction be if I over-planted my total depleting allotment?

A. The deduction for over planting of the total depleting allotment would be five times the general depleting payment for the farm, or, in your case, would be $6.25 per acre.

ANNUAL SCHOOL PICNIC WILL BE HELD FRIDAY

The annual school picnic will be held this week Friday at the park providing the weather is good, or at the school gym if the weather is not ideal for an outdoor picnic.

The entire community each year is invited to the school picnic, which marks the close of the school year. The senior class members are soliciting patrons for items to bring. Any who might not be called on should bring a covered dish and enough sandwiches for their own family.

SLOGAN

You'll have to hurry as there is only a little more than one week in which to send in your slogan for Klemme. Somebody is going to earn a crisp $5.00 bill awfully easy.

The rules are simple. Write your slogan on a penny post card and mail to the Klemme Times. The slogan should begin with the word "Klemme." And remember, the shorter and more easily read, the better.

Send in your slogan today. Anyone can compete in this contest. Each slogan must be on a separate post card, but you may send in as many as you wish.

TWO SENIORS TIED FOR HIGHEST SCHOOL HONORS AS GRADUATES

Klemme School Claims Rare Distinction Of Having Two Valedictorians

Supt. W. Henry Galbreth of the Klemme High School believes that the graduating class of the high school this year can lay claim to an unusual and perhaps the only case of its kind in the state of Iowa this year, in that two seniors will be named Valedictorians of the graduating class.

Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and Novella Beier are the two students thus honored. When Principal A. L. Kingery and several other faculty members figured grades and averages for the four years of high school work of the fifteen graduating seniors, they were amazed to find that the averages for both the students named figured out exactly the same. Both Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and Novella Beier had an average for the four years' work of 94.3 plus per cent. Their grades were checked and rechecked and the final result was the same, so both students were honored by being named Valedictorians.

Paul Schuldt was second high in the running and was named Salutatorian.

Supt. Galbreth states that the class showed unusual scholastic ability as there were three other students in addition to the above out of a class of fifteen who had an average above ninety per cent for the four years' work.

SENIORS HELD CLASS DAY EXERCISES TUESDAY EVE.

A large crowd was present at the school gymnasium Tuesday evening to hear the Senior Class present their Class Day Exercises. The president of the class, Paul Schuldt, presented the members of the class giving a short sketch of the activities of each.

The Class History, Prophecy and Will were read and a program given of a varied nature.

KLEMME BUSINESS MAN SELLS OUT AFTER FOURTEEN YEARS IN DRUG STORE

Mr. and Mrs. Harold Mutch, of Grundy Center, Will Take Over Business

Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. "Pete" Wilson completed a deal whereby they sold their drug store business in Klemme to Mr. and Mrs. Harold Mutch, of Grundy Center.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have lived in Klemme nearly fourteen years and during that time have built up a good business in the drug store line. They have one of the best drug stores in north Iowa for a town of this size.

Mr. and Mrs. Mutch are young people who are ambitious to make the store even better. Mr. Mutch has had experience in drug store work and is at present employed at Grundy Center in a drug store. Mr. and Mrs. Mutch expect to take over the business about June 1st.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have not as yet made plans for the future. However, they expect to take a well earned vacation before again entering business. They plan to go to Washington, D. C. for an extended visit with their daughter and family. Mr. and Mrs. Bob Risser and son, Bobbie, as soon as affairs have been completed here.

JUNIOR-SENIOR BANQUET HELD FRIDAY EVENING

In true Japanese style the Senior class of 1938 and the faculty were welcomed to the Junior-Senior banquet on May 13th. The gymnasium was transformed into a Japanese garden which was very realistic. The walls of the gym were banked with branches which gave the appearance of an open space in a woodland. In one corner the moon shone over a rock garden and lily pool over which was placed a rustic bridge. Spring flowers were growing around the grassy slope of the pool. Thirteen Japanese lanterns solved the lighting problems for the evening.

Harold Wicks, president of the junior class was toastmaster. Mr. Galbreth, LaRayne Stille, Miss Brakel, Mildred Patterson, Marvin Stokesbary, Lester Neuberger and Ruben Grosshuesch gave toasts. Mrs. Schaeffer and Mr. Elstad entertained with some Japanese music.

There were many sighs among the members of the senior class as Paul Schuldt, president of the class, gave his response and farewell to old Klemme High.

In Japanese costume which transformed them into Geisha girls, the following girls helped serve the banquet: Shirley Johnson, Betty Neuhring, Jackie Kudje, Maxine Stokesbary and Gertrude Grosshuesch. Allen Barz, Keith Stille and Harold Swalve helped serve, also.

The mothers of the juniors prepared the excellent dinner which consisted of fruit cocktail, chicken a la king in timbales, new potatoes, buttered asparagus, perfection salad, celery, pickles, hot rolls, mint ice cream, angel food cake and coffee.

The winner, thirty-four-year-old Leslie Pawson, made the route in 2 hours, 35 minutes 34½ seconds.

Blondes Hold Peace Conference

Blondes from many parts of the United States interested in preserving peace are pictured as they answered the roll call at the first National Conference of Blondes to End War. The purpose of the "Blonde Brigade" is to fight war. Should America be invaded, members of the brigade will meet the enemy. They are confident that there isn't a soldier in the world who would shoot a lovely blonde.

My Friend Joseph

By
Lillian Oakley
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

THOUGH a strong wind was blowing, driving sheets of rain across my front yard, I wasn't surprised to see Joseph, my little seven-year-old neighbor, making his way up the front walk. Yesterday was my birthday and he was here when the postman brought me a five-pound box of candy, and Joseph has a weakness for good chocolates.

He comes puffing in and while he sheds his waterproof coat he looks around for the candy. But all the candy spots are vacant. My bon-bon resistance is below normal on bad days and I have put all the sweets away and resolved not to bring them out for a week. But now from past experience I know that without once asking me for any candy Joseph will soon have me bringing out my five-pound box and urging him to take all he wants. He has an indirect method all his own that never conflicts with any of the rules of etiquette and always gets him what he wants.

He pulls a low stool in front of mine, looks up at me and says, "Guess who I'd be if I could be anybody I wanted to be?"

This is easy for he always wants to be Tarzan or Dizzy Dean. But I'm all wrong.

"Not today," he says with emphasis, "today I'd be 'Laddin An' His Lamp."

"And guess what's the first thing I'd tell that old genie to do after I rubbed my lamp?"

This isn't really meant to be a question so I simply sit still and look interested.

"I'd tell him to build my mother the finest house in town an' furnish it full of the finest furniture in town an' have a hot supper on the table ready for her when she got home from work. And I'd make him give me some money an' I'd go down town an' pay all of her bills an' put 'em on the table by her plate." He finishes exultantly.

Joseph has no father and the bills that have to be paid at the end of every month hang heavy over his head.

He clasps both little hands around one knee and rocks himself backwards and forwards on the stool and smiles over this happy surprise for his mother. Then he looks around at me as if afraid I am feeling neglected.

"Then," he says with enthusiasm, "I'd rub my lamp an' when that old genie came I'd tell him to bring me a motorcycle just like the road cops ride only littler, an' a police uniform an' a machine gun that could shoot forever an' a five-pound box of candy just like the one you got for your birthday yesterday. And," he adds with a smile that shows all of his dimples, "I'd bring you down about half of the candy."

The object of his visit has been attained. And he leaves with his pockets full of my birthday chocolates, the rain having let up somewhat.

It seemed curious that any place should be named "Llanfair gwynwg, llogerychwyndrobw andysiliogogoch." Yet a Welsh village bears this 58-tered name. It is a local charm and beauty. Llan "church," Fair is "of Ma Pwll Gwynwg" is "the pool White hazels," Goger is "near," while Chwyrn Drobw "the swift whirlpool," and Ty gogo goch is "of Tysilio of red cave." A child's underwaist is a 'bodice,' while rubber boots are 'Wellingtons.' The word 'sweater' still strikes many of the English as a trifle low-class and odoriferous; they call it a 'jersey,' 'jumper,' 'pullover,' or 'cardigan.'

Teams from the Industrial Home for the Blind at Oakland, Calif., demonstrate "sound" baseball. The batter hits a jingling ball and runs down a padded baseline. Ten players form a team. Home plate has a bell on it to show when runs are scored.

CAN WE CHEAT DEATH?

Science Admits, But Life Expectancy Can Be Raised

JOSEPH W. LABINE

Since the world began man has sought to cheat death. Some have looked for the Fountain of Youth; others, more scientific, admit earthly immortality is impossible but cling to the hope that man's visit here may be lengthened.

The foremost pioneers in this quest are America's insurance companies who currently celebrate Life Insurance week. The combined mass of statistics gathered by these firms during the past century has given the world an amazingly accurate picture of how long the average man can expect to live, and what he can do to live longer.

These figures, linked with reports of sensational medical developments, today give John Doe good reason to believe he will live longer than his grandfather. He may even dream of the day when science can give him new organs to replace his degenerating vital organs.

But artificial hearts are as yet intangible. A more tangible fact is that science has given the United States more than 4,000,000,000 years of life since the American Revolution. A man born 150 years ago could expect to live from 30 to 35 years, but seven years ago the newborn had a life expectancy of 59 years—a girl baby four years longer than a boy.

Thus, in 150 years, the average life span has been boosted 25 years.

Joint Fight on Death.

A single factor is responsible. Though selfish in his instinct for self preservation, has co-operated with other men whom he knew would help cope with the problem of death. Scientific work has been done to the insurance companies for figures showing what causes death. Little known mortality facts have been excavated from the mire of centuries, and erased. States and the federal government co-operated in eliminating causes.

Figures from the United States health service reveal that a way to live longer is to be in North or South Dakota, Kansas, Oklahoma—and to stay there. Statistics compiled through the years prove that expectation of life in these states is almost 10 per cent higher than for the nation as a whole. As a second choice the seeker after a long life might pick Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Arkansas, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Kentucky, Alabama and Mississippi.

100-Year Goal. The term "span of life" is changing. Science points out that it is not changed through the centuries. Probably as many persons lived to be 90 in ancient Rome as in New York city today. The span, maximum average life, is about 100 years. Although the 1930 census showed 3,964 persons who claimed to be 100 or older, the figure is open to question because nearly 2,500 of these were colored people who simply "guessed" their ages.

This chart, prepared by the Northwestern National Life Insurance company, shows how America's death causes have varied since 1901. Degenerative diseases, including heart disease, cerebral hemorrhage and cancer are rising. So are accidents and suicides. Communicable diseases include smallpox, typhoid, yellow fever, leprosy, malaria and cholera.

If 100 years is the maximum average, it offers a far-away goal for scientists who have thus far increased life expectancy to 59 years. To increase the average only 10 years is a monumental task that would necessitate almost complete removal of the diseases now responsible for juvenile mortality. Ailments causing infant deaths must be strangled. Tuberculosis among young people, communicable diseases—and especially venereal diseases—would be stamped out, and advances in psychiatry would eliminate the menace of suicide. All this, and our life expectancy would be raised a scant 10 years!

2,000 Years of Progress.

No forward stride can be expected overnight. Expectation of life has been increasing slowly for almost 2,000 years, and we are now much more fortunate than Roman infants in Caesar's day who could look forward to only 20 or 25 years on earth.

Insurance companies are both selfish and benevolent in their campaigns to increase longevity. The fact remains that every firm nowadays takes a deep interest in its policy holders' personal health. Many companies offer yearly examinations and distribute literature to help its customers get healthy and stay healthy.

No definite set of health rules can be applied to all men. But physicians agree that a long life is encouraged by following certain general laws. They may be placed under five headings. Each is well known but will bear repetition:

Fresh Air and Exercise.—Fresh air is the largest single element in the preservation of health. Windows of the sleeping room should always be opened to admit it freely. Business and professional men and women should take special care to get sufficient outdoor exercise daily.

Food and Diet.—Drink plenty of water so there may be an abundant excess to wash out the waste products through lungs, skin and kidneys. Eat fruits, green vegetables, whole wheat bread and milk. Vary the diet and avoid an excess of meat, especially at ages over 40.

Sleep.—Some people require more sleep than others, but few can keep in the best of health with less than seven or eight hours.

Mental Attitude.—Everyone who wishes to keep well and live to old age should persist in a cheerful view of life and prohibit worry so far as possible.

Temperance.—Excess use of alcohol definitely increases susceptibility to disease.

General scientific advances in the battle for longevity have been made without fanfare. But occasionally has come a discovery whose potentialities startle mankind. One of these is the testimony given by Dr. Alexander Cannon, distinguished British physician and psychiatrist who went to the Far East investigating supernatural phenomena. He gained an audience with the supposedly unapproachable Grand Lama of Tibet who staged for him one of the weirdest demonstrations of occultism the eye of a white man ever beheld.

Tibetan Black Magic.

He reported a coffin containing the body of a man seven years buried was brought before the Lama. At word of command the "dead" man opened his eyes, advanced to the throne, bowed, and retreated to his coffin where he apparently became lifeless again. Dr. Cannon reported he made all the usual medical tests and pronounced the man dead. But the Lama assured him that in another seven years the body would again be resurrected!

That was black magic, but there is a truly scientific foundation behind the "artificial heart" recently developed by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in collaboration with Dr. Alexis Carrel. Briefly, the heart is known as a "perfusion" pump made entirely of glass in which the only moving parts are the valves and the gas and the fluid which sustain life in the organ under observation.

Can such an artificial pump be grafted to the human being, replacing a natural heart that will no longer function? If possible, it might postpone death for years, though medical men suggest that the broken down tissues of the body would often prove too much for any robot heart to overcome.

Many other experiments of this nature have been revealed recently. At the University of Minnesota heart and lungs are being kept alive 24 hours after removal, in a dry airtight vessel immersed in water to maintain an even temperature! University of Pennsylvania scientists are working on a glass stomach which would faithfully enact the performances of natural organs.

Such things are done in the name of health, but in the last analysis there can be no escaping the truth—man is working to increase his days on earth!

Keeping Up With Science

By Science Service.—WNU Service.

Magnetic Field of the Earth Still Is Mystery of Science

Washington.—Scientists are still searching for a hidden clue or perhaps a new and unknown principle of physics which can explain the large magnetism of the earth and the far vaster magnetism of the sun, said Dr. M. A. Tuve of the department of terrestrial magnetism of Carnegie institution in an address here.

For ten years the department, under the leadership of Dr. J. A. Fleming, has searched for the answer to the baffling question whose solution would make clearer the role played by the earth's magnetic field in man's daily life; a role which affects radio, wire communication, cosmic ray intensity, the amount of ultraviolet light striking the earth and many other factors in man's existence.

On their 10-year research march toward this goal Doctor Tuve and his colleagues, Dr. L. R. Hafstad and Dr. N. P. Heydenburg of the department, and Prof. Gregory Breit of Wisconsin university, have uncovered new and important findings, but most fundamental of all was the detection and measurement of the enormous force within the cores of atoms that binds their parts together and prevents the universe from consisting of nothing but the nuclei of the simplest atom, hydrogen.

No Clue Yet Discovered.

Thus the program which began and still seeks explanations of earth and solar magnetism has led into the hearts of the tiniest things in the universe. But neither the tremendous force there discovered nor any other fact of modern physics has yet led to a clue which might explain the permanent magnetism of the earth, Doctor Tuve told his audience.

To explain these large magnetic fields in the sun and earth, it appears that either some new complexity will have to be introduced into the fundamental concepts of physics or that some new and yet unfound principle of physics will have to be discovered. The first view seems the more probable, Doctor Tuve indicated.

However, some unknown atomic force occurring at the extremely high pressures within the earth and the sun may be the cause of the large magnetic fields, said he.

The nuclei between which the new force of attraction has been found to exist are so minute, he added, that if one of them were enlarged to a diameter of one-half inch the fingers and thumbs of the investigators on the same scale would be approximately 10,000,000 miles long.

Microbe "Death Ray" for Wounds and Foods

New York.—A microbe "death ray" to keep your food from spoiling, your wounds from getting infected, and your lips from being soiled with other people's germs traveling on glasses and table ware, was demonstrated to the American institute here.

Development of the ray may also add a new word to American vocabularies—"rentschlerization." It is derived from the name of the man who developed the ray, Dr. Harvey C. Rentschler, director of research in the lamp division of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company. "Rentschlerization" will rank with "pasteurization."

Fewer Pacific Isles 5,000 Years in Future

Washington.—There won't be so many Pacific islands for nations to argue about 5,000 years in the future, if sea levels continue to rise as they have in the past, according to geologists, who point out that all but the most rapidly growing of the coral atolls of the South Pacific, now prized as air bases, will be submerged or greatly reduced in size in the near future.

Sea levels are now rising at the rate of one foot every twelve years, due to the melting of the Arctic and Antarctic ice caps, left over from the most recent Ice age, which began to decline only about 50,000 years ago. When this ice has all melted away, sea levels will be at least 100 feet higher than at present.

Cryolite Supplies

Ivigtut, Greenland.—Visible supplies of cryolite, the essential fluxing mineral in the manufacture of aluminum by the present electrolytic process, will last at least fifty years more, according to Dr. Charles R. Toothaker, curator of the Commercial museum in Philadelphia. Most of it comes from Greenland.

New Tobacco Found by Plant Explorer in Latin America

Washington.—Snow-White's long slumber, before the prince kissed her awake, is made to seem a brief cat-nap by comparison with the record of tobacco seeds accidentally hidden under houses in Costa Rica. These tiny seeds have remained dormant as long as the houses stood—sixty years or more—and are aroused to germination and growth when the houses are knocked down by an earthquake or demolished by their owners.

The tale of the sleeping seeds was told here by W. A. Archer, botanist for the United States Department of Agriculture, who has returned after four years as a plant explorer in Latin America. Mr. Archer's special objective was to find new varieties of tobacco, but he has also brought back seeds of many other kinds of plants.

A couple of generations ago, he stated, a good deal of tobacco used to be raised in Costa Rica. In recent years the crop has been given up. But in the earth under the basementless houses are large numbers of tobacco seeds, and when a house is destroyed, rain and sun have a chance to make them grow. By collecting seed from these volunteer tobacco crops amid house ruins, Mr. Archer was able to save for experimental and breeding purposes a number of tobacco varieties long since out of cultivation.

Big Peanuts of Brazil.

Another find of possible importance to American agriculture (and circuses) consists of two or three varieties of giant peanuts that are at home in the Brazilian state of Matto Grosso. The kernels of these peanuts are bigger than the whole nuts, shells and all, commonly found on American peanut stands.

Mr. Archer pooh-poohed the notion that a plant explorer's life is one of romance and danger. It takes you into strange places, yes, he said. But that usually means merely that you have a hard time finding a place to sleep, an even harder time getting properly cooked food, and that you can't trust the drinking water—and even less the native alcoholic beverages. However, he added philosophically, you can always eat bananas. They may become monotonous, but at least they're dependable.

Perils of snakes he shrugged off. In the whole four years, he declared, he saw exactly three wild snakes. The real danger in the American tropics comes from insects that carry a variety of most ungodly diseases.

Buried Water Supplies Artificially Recharged

Washington.—Methods of increasing available underground water supplies by "recharging" the buried reservoirs artificially, tested by A. T. Mitchelson and D. C. Muekel, United States Department of Agriculture irrigation engineers, may be the answer to the problem of falling water levels in wells in many irrigated districts. By spreading surface water out to cover a large area, through which it will percolate down to the underground reservoirs, some of this falling of water levels can be prevented.

Plant cover, the engineers report, while using some water, is very useful in aiding percolation of surface water into the ground, and should be preserved wherever possible. Silty water, they find, should not be allowed to collect in pools, for the fine silt particles seal up the pores in the earth and prevent percolation.

Translucent Rubber Made With Magnesium Carbonate

Ambler, Pa.—A new grade of magnesium carbonate, used in making translucent rubber products, has been developed by chemists here as a step in both improving translucent rubber and lessening American dependence on foreign imports of the substance, it is announced.

Improvements in translucent rubber products manufactured with it are attributed by its discoverers to the fact that it bends light rays to exactly the same degree as they are bent by translucent rubber. In technical language, the new crystalline substance has the same refractive index as rubber.

Many Pains May Result From Sinus Infection

Chicago.—Toothache may in reality be a recoil from sinus infection, Dr. G. Thaddeus Gregory of Indianapolis told the Chicago Dental society. He said that pain in or around the teeth may result elsewhere in the head, and neuralgias of the ear, mastoid, scalp or even neck, shoulder or arm may be caused from dental origins such as decay, impacted tooth, split tooth, or degenerated pulps. The reason is that the tooth may be irritating the trifacial nerve which divides into three parts to supply various parts of the head.

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Fifteen girl scouts, our captain, Lieutenant and three mothers attended the "Girl Scout Day Camp" at Mason City Saturday, May 14. There were 500 scouts and leaders registered. After registering we were divided up into groups with Mason City girls. Each group had to find their place in the woods to prepare their dinner. We had to build a fire and cook our own meal. The afternoon was spent in playing games and singing songs. Everybody had a very good time and we met many other girl scouts.

GRADES 5 AND 6
Larry Van Syoc and Junior Buntentbach—reporters

We had our books checked Wednesday and Thursday to see whether we had used them carefully or not.

We have finished some of our text books and started reviewing for our semester tests.

We had a "neatness" contest over all of our written work. Each paper that was headed correctly, and was neatly written received an "A" on the bottom left hand corner. The six people having the highest number of "A's" are Edward 49, Patricia 48, Eunice 49, Wesley 40, Ewald 38 and Corrine 37.

Patricia's side is ahead in the health contest.

Ewald got a perfect score in our last self-testing drill.

Miss Irvine read to us outside on Thursday.

GRADES 7 AND 8

We had a contest in penmanship. The members in the room acted as judges. Billy Grosshuesch and Lorraine Buntentbach were named the best writers.

by the Keystone Wire and Fence Co.

The Northern Lumber Co. also had a nice display of the numerous products they handle, including displays from their implement and mill work departments.

Free peanuts were given out and the ladies were given seven-ty. About fifty free prizes were given away after the show.

The gathering Thursday night demonstrated the need of having a community hall in Klemme where large crowds could be more easily and comfortably accommodated.

COMING MARRIAGE OF LOCAL COUPLE ANNOUNCED AT PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Barz entertained 16 young ladies at their home Thursday evening, May 12. The time was spent playing Bingo. Prizes were given the winners.

Lunch was served at a late hour at which time the approaching marriage of their daughter, Ethel to Edmund Josten, son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Josten was announced. It was revealed by little scrolls attached to horse shoes found at each place. The wedding will take place in June Doris and Avis Barz served as waitresses.

MINNOW SEASON NOW OPEN

Since May 15th it has been lawful to take minnows and use them as bait. According to the Iowa law, minnows may be taken by means of a minnow dip net not larger than four feet in diameter, or a minnow seine not to exceed 15 ft. in length. The mesh cannot be smaller than one-quarter inch bar measure or larger than one-half inch bar measure.

The Conservation Commission, in announcing the minnow season, also called to the attention of persons engaged in minnow seining that it is unlawful to ship or transport minnows out of the state for the purpose of sale.

The careful use of minnows was also mentioned. A shortage of minnows in the state has caused a decline in the population of game fish in some waters, it was explained. Game fish are dependent upon minnows as one of the most important items of their diet. To remove most of the minnows from any body of water causes the larger game fish to eat the smaller of their own species. Waste in seining and taking more minnows than can be properly cared for are given as the two chief causes of the depleted minnow population, explained the Commission.

It is always a soldier's desire to live beyond his beans.

Palm Trees Produce Figs in Guatemala, Salvador

It is not unusual to see in Guatemala and Salvador, the great crown of a palm protruding from the bole of a wild fig tree. Literally speaking, the fig tree has enveloped and absorbed the palm, writes a correspondent in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Birds usually cause this odd relationship. The base of old leaves and the tops of palms make ideal resting places for birds, and they often fly to these perches to eat a fig, plucked from a nearby tree.

The seeds of the fig fall and germinate in the tender innershoots of the palm or in old fiber at the leaf base. The tiny roots on the seedlings before long force their way into the rich heart of the palm.

Soon the palm is supporting a luxuriant growth of tendrils. In the course of years one of the tendrils reaches the ground and throws out roots. The fig tree is then triumphant.

The crown of palm leaves holds out to the last, but ultimately these also are smothered, and fall, brown and withered, to the foot of the fig tree.

Chinese Girls at School

In the native schools of China the Chinese girl gets very little book-learning. She enters the school late, —at about the age of ten or eleven, receives instruction in morals and manners and marries as soon as her brief educational course is finished. The proverbial Chinese politeness is taught in the schools as well as the home. In the classroom the girls learn how to greet friends and acquaintances, how to receive visitors with all old-time Chinese formality. How to offer tea, how to present an umbrella to an aged lady, how to share an umbrella with a companion —a thousand and one acts of courtesy each distinguished by its own proper ceremony. In families which have become somewhat modernized the young Chinese daughters by way of a final-polishing in their last year at school learn civics and receive a sort of patriotic instruction.

Spelling Shakespeare

The name of William Shakespeare has been variously spelled Shakespeare, Shakspeare, Shakspre by the different printers and publishers of his plays; but, in his dedications of "Venus and Adonis" and "The Rape of Lucrece," he himself spelled it Shakespeare. The form Shakspre has been in use since the publication of the First Folio Edition of his works. Dowden, Furnivall, and Delius all use that form. But Wise wrote, "The Autograph of William Shakespeare . . . together with 4,000 ways of spelling the name."—Literary Digest.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—In the midst of all of the politics and planning in the national capital, there has lately come to the surface one of the deepest and most bitter rows that has developed incident to the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is the controversy, long smoldering, between the President and the newspapers of the country. It is out in the open now, and the struggle is a desperate one.

To go back a few years, it will be remembered how Mr. Roosevelt was described as having a very friendly press when he entered the White House. He continued to maintain the most pleasant relations between his office and the newspapers of the country, and especially with the Washington correspondents, until doubt began to develop in the minds of some editors as to the soundness of New Deal policies in 1935. The number of opposition editors increased and in 1936 it was generally said that the President had only about one half of the newspapers supporting him. But even then, Mr. Roosevelt continued to have exceedingly cordial relations with the corps of correspondents who report on national affairs under a Washington date line.

The Washington correspondents and columnists who found little or no fault with the New Deal began to dwindle in numbers eventually. Now, as a guess, I would say that probably only about one-fourth of the five or six hundred writers believe heart-and-soul with New Deal policies. This does not mean that those who observe weaknesses or vulnerable points in the New Deal do not write their commendation when they believe it is due. The difference is that they are no longer completely "sold" on New Deal statements or propaganda without digging further into every situation. As a result, obviously, attention is directed daily to those weaknesses, as well as the strong points, of the New Deal; the news is no longer all ballyhoo for the New Deal.

Another result is that White House press conferences no longer are the jovial, carefree meetings filled with laughter, good-natured jibes and exchanges, friendly shots back and forth between the President and the correspondents. On a number of occasions, quite the contrary has been true. The President has spoken some very harsh words now and then about news dispatches from Washington by certain writers. He has not minced words when some Republican writer, like Mark Sullivan of the New York Herald Tribune syndicate, for instance, wrote his observations of a critical nature. Altogether, I believe it can be said that the newspaper criticism at times has got under the President's skin and has made him quite irascible and squeamish. I do not mean to say that this condition obtains every time the President meets with the press, but it has happened with greater and greater frequency of late that Mr. Roosevelt has found fault with what the correspondents were writing.

Such things, generally, are not written. Newspaper men usually do not inject themselves into rows, nor do they consider that they are more than the eyes and ears for their readers. That is to say, they consider their work impersonal and for the reason that it is impersonal seldom take the public into their confidences on matters that seem to them to be purely personal in nature.

In the last two weeks, however, the differences between the President and his advisors, on the one hand, and the editors throughout the country and their Washington correspondents, on the other hand, at last have been brought into the open. That is, and I believe this is a fair statement, Mr. Roosevelt has brought the row into the open.

The match seems to have been touched to the dynamite by Mr. Roosevelt at a recent "off the record" session which he held with the members of the Managing Editors' society. The society meets annually in Washington and always during their stay, they are invited to a White House meeting. In the past, such meetings have promoted a better understanding between the editors and the administration, but the last session appears to have done exactly the opposite.

It is not permissible to disclose what goes on in those meetings and, not having been present, I cannot vouch for details of the recent meeting. I know, however, that heretofore the editors came away always feeling that benefits of the meeting had been important. At the last meeting, according to common understanding around Washington, the discussion was heated. The President's remarks to the editors must have been vicious. In any event, there were few of the editors came away in a good humor. Indeed, at a breakfast of the society the next morning, one managing editor challenged his colleagues with the question: "Are we mice or are we men?"

Again asserting my inability to vouch for all of the statements that have deluged Washington since the meeting, I know that many of the editors were "red headed" or "hot under the collar" or whatever your favorite expression may be. And well they may have been if it is true that the President told them they had no genuine knowledge of public sentiment in their several communities, nor did they have any real influence. But the crowning shot, according to report, was a pointed inference that the President better understood what the country needed than the editors.

Immediately thereafter the American Newspaper Publishers association, at its New York meeting, had before it a report calling for the elimination of politics and politicians from control of the radio or the press. The report cited Mr. Roosevelt's frequent use of the airplanes for his "fireside chats," and it added:

"The inescapable task of the American press is to guard against any encroachment upon American democracy by the federal government with radio as the instrument of political power."

That incident, of course, was not ignored in Washington. While there was no word from the White House, the newspapers were the target for an intertemperate speech by Sen. Sherman Minton of Indiana. Senator Minton has been a New Deal mouthpiece through the last year and only a few persons believed that he was speaking his own views. Most observers thought he was doing a "Charley McCarthy" for those in the New Deal who needed a ventriloquist and a forum then and there to get their views printed.

Mr. Minton jumped all over the newspapers. None of them would print the New Deal side, he asserted; none would be fair. They simply are awful things, these newspapers. The report of the newspaper publishers, mentioned above, was described by the senator as "an exhibition of unmitigated gall." Some newspapers were accused of "spewing out their propaganda" against the New Deal and he charged that the New Deal "simply can not get its side of the story printed."

The senator certainly got his side of the case printed for the metropolitan dailies reaching Washington gave him vast space—and also they subsequently gave him editorial attention. Senators on the floor listened to Senator Minton, too, but only Senator Norris of Nebraska and Schwollenbach of Washington took any notice. Senator Schwollenbach felt impelled to make a few well-chosen remarks about the way the press has treated the New Dealers, including himself.

And, I almost forgot about it! Senator Minton introduced a bill that would send an editor or reporter to jail if they printed any information which they knew to be incorrect. The guilty persons could be fined many thousands of dollars, too, under the Minton bill. I guess the reason I almost forgot about the Minton bill to punish editors was because nobody took it seriously, least of all the colleagues of Senator Minton in the senate. It will go into a committee pigeonhole and will never be heard of again.

Involvement of radio and its control by the federal government in the "freedom of speech" battle calls to mind that there has been much complaint lately concerning the federal communications commission. That agency has supreme authority over the radio stations of the country. They cannot operate without a license. The law which set up the commission gave authority to license stations for three years, but as a matter of practice the commission never has issued a license to any station for a period longer than six months. In consequence, every station owner and operator has to come into the commission twice a year and file an application for renewal of its right to operate.

The complaint is that the broadcasting industry is running on a six-months' basis, uncertain at all times about its future status. Twice a year, therefore, any station owner has to make a guess whether his investment is worth anything. One of the charges against this practice, a charge hurled by David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, was that the short-period licensing practice "leaves the door open for indirect and insidious censorship." The charge, of course, considers the possibilities of underhanded activity that always are available to an individual in public office.

Lesson for May 22

SERVING THROUGH CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Mark 12:13-17, 28-34.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12:31
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Sermon on a Penny.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Sermon on a Penny.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loyalty to God and Country.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Obligations of Christian Citizenship.

"For God and Country" is a rallying cry that well summarizes the spirit and duty of the Christian citizen. So clear and inspiring are the teachings of God's Word regarding the relationship of the Christian to his country that one marvels that national leaders who are seeking to stimulate civic loyalty do not promote a revival of the study of the Bible. Dr. Moore is right when he says, "No bad citizen is a good Christian and no good Christian is a bad citizen." The solution of our nation's problems would be a great evangelistic campaign from coast to coast. A man like Moody would then appear in his true position as a great patriot. The soul-winner would be more important than the vote-getter. Why not try it?

Our lesson presents our Lord on Tuesday of His passion week, when He met His adversaries in their cunning efforts to entrap Him in His words so that they might condemn Him. The two incidents before us have broader application than to citizenship alone, but we may well consider them in that light, for they reveal that the citizen who is right with God will be right with the nation and with his own neighbors.

I. The Christian Citizen Loves His Country (vv. 13-17).

The Pharisees, who hated Rome for its domination of Palestine, and the Herodians, who supported Rome in its control of the land, were enemies, but they joined forces to tempt Christ. They knew that if He said "Yes" to their question the Jews would be angry, and if He said "No" He could be condemned as a traitor to Rome.

The trap was set, but it caught only the crafty hunters. Taking their own pocket money he declared that if they used Caesar's money they ought to pay taxes to Caesar. The coin stood for an orderly government, benefits of which they enjoyed and which they ought to support.

II. The Christian Citizen Loves God (vv. 20-30).

Although this point comes second in our lesson it comes first in experience. It is the man who renders unto God the love of the heart, soul, mind, and all of his strength (v. 30) who is ready really to love his country as he should.
